Rashad Khalifa	The Torah and The Quran 28:48 Now that the truth has come to them from us, they said, "If only we could be given what was given to Moses!" Did they not disbelieve in what was given to Moses in the past? They said, "Both (scriptures) are works of magic that copied one another." They also said, "We are disbelievers in both of them."
Shabbir Ahmed	28:48 And yet, now that the truth has come to them from Us, they say, "Why is he not given the like of what Moses was given?" (The supernatural miracles they had heard about). But, did not the generations before this revelation reject the truth of what Moses was given? They used to say, "Two examples of delusion, supporting each other (Moses and Aaron)! And they said, "Certainly, we reject both of them."

The followers of man-made stories and teachings that are peddled in the name of God's messengers will be rejected by those very messengers who will serve as witnesses against them. Muhammad will reject Sunni and Shiite mushriks for turning the monotheistic system into various sects concocted by a unanimous "holy" corporation consisting of Muhammad and troops of scholars and religious leaders.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (28:76)

In our times, the world has hundreds of obscenely rich people. Many of them accumulated their wealth through corporate laws designed by the wealthy or their proxies to maintain and accumulate more wealth for the rich. While a select few get richer, the majority of the world population is living in poverty. The alarming widening of the gap between haves and have-nots is created by corrupt business conduct, government subsidies, dubious contract deals, monopolistic practices, corporate termite lobbying the so-called elected officials, war profiteering, currency speculations, credit card usury, banking regulations, hostile take over the governments, and ignorance and apathy of the masses.

Lit., "parties" or "sects" - here undoubtedly referring to the division of people into "high" and "low-born": a division which the Qur'an utterly condemns. The group which, as mentioned in the next sentence, Pharaoh "deemed utterly low" were the Israelites, who had been placed on the lowest rung of the Egyptian social scale and were deprived of almost all human rights.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (28:4)

see note 7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (28:5)

Lit., "leaders" or "exemplars" (a'immah, sing. imam) - an allusion to the historical fact that the Hebrews were the first to accept a monotheistic creed in a clear, unequivocal formulation, and thus became the forerunners of both Christianity and Islam.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (28:6)

This Haman, who is mentioned several times in the Qur'an as Pharaoh's chief adviser, is not to be confused with the Persian Haman of the Old Testament (The Book of Esther iii ff). Most probably, the word "Haman" as used in the Qur'an is not a proper name at all but the Arabicized echo of the compound designation Ha-Amen given to every high priest of the Egyptian god Amon. Since at the time in question the cult of Amon was paramount in Egypt, his high priest held a rank second only to that of the reigning Pharaoh. The assumption that the person spoken of in the Qur'an as Haman was indeed the high priest of the cult of Amon is strengthened by Pharaoh's demand (mentioned in verse 38 of this surah as well as in 40:36-37) that Haman erect for him "a lofty tower" from which he could "have a look at [or "ascend to"] the god of Moses": which may be, among other things, an allusion to the hieratic purpose of the great pyramids of Egypt and to the function of the high priest as their chief architect. (But see also note 37).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (28:6)

The Egyptians - obviously remembering the earlier, alien Hyksos dynasty that had invaded Egypt and subsequently allied itself with the Hebrews (see surah 12 note 42) - feared that the latter might in the future, too, make common cause with foreign invaders (cf. Exodus i, 10): and to protect themselves against this danger, they decided - as mentioned in several places in the Qur'an as well as in the Bible - to have every male Hebrew child killed.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (28:7)

Sc., "and he will be saved": cf. 20:39.

I.e., disclose his true identity in the hope that he would be returned to her.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (28:10)

Lit., "so that she might be of those who have faith".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (28:14)

This statement, almost entirely identical with 12:22 (where it refers to Joseph), stresses the supreme divine blessing of spiritual consciousness (ilm in its deepest significance) combined with rational thought, as expressed in the concept of hukm, the "ability to judge [between right and wrong]". As is evident from 26:20, Moses reached this spiritual maturity after the events described in verses 15 ff.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (28:15)

Lit., "at a time of its people's unawareness".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (28:15)

I.e., of the Hebrews.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (28:15)

Regarding the reference to "Satan's doing", see first half of note 16 on 15:17. In the present instance, verses 16-17 seem to indicate that it was the Israelite, and not the Egyptian, who had been in the wrong (cf. next note). Apparently, Moses had come to the assistance of the Israelite out of an instinctive sense of racial kinship without regard to the rights and wrongs of the case; but immediately afterwards he realized that he had committed a grave sin not only by killing, however inadvertently, an innocent person, but also by basing his action on a mere tribal - or, as would describe it today, racial or national - prejudice. Evidently, this is the purport of the above Quranic segment of the story of Moses. Its moral has been stressed and explained by the Prophet on many occasions: cf. his famous saying, "He is not of us who proclaims the cause of tribal partisanship (asabiyyah); and he is not of us who fights in the cause of tribal partisanship; and he is not of us who dies in the cause of tribal partisanship" (Abu Da'ud, on the authority of Jubayr ibn Mut'im). When he was asked to explain the meaning of "tribal partisanship", the Prophet answered, it means helping thine own people in an unjust cause" (ibid., on the authority of Wathilah ibn al-Asqa).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (28:17)

According to Ibn Abbas and Muqatil (both of them quoted by Baghawi), "this is an indication that the Israelite whom Moses had helped was a denier of the truth (kafir)" - i.e., in the moral sense of this definition. (See also last sentence of verse 86 of this surah.)

The inhabitants of Madyan (called Midian in the Bible) were Arabs of the Amorite group. Since they were racially and linguistically closely related to the Hebrews, they could be counted upon to help Moses in his plight. For the geographical location of the region of Madyan, see surah 7 note 67.

For an explanation of Moses' wanderings in the desert, see note 7 on 20:10; for that of the allegory of the "fire", note 7 on 27:7-8. Throughout this work, the noun at-tur ("the mountain") is being rendered as "Mount Sinai", for it is to this and to no other mountain that the Qur'an invariably refers in the above term.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (28:29)

Sc., "as to which way we are to pursue".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (28:30)

As in 19:52 and 20:80, the reference to the "right" side has a connotation of "blessedness": see in this respect note 25 on 74:39. As regards the "blessed ground", see note 9 on the expression "twice-hallowed valley" in 20:12. The "tree" referred to in the above verse is obviously identical with the "burning bush" of the Bible (Exodus iii. 2).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (28:32)

As pointed out by Zamakhshari, the above idiomatic sentence is a metonym recalling a well-known gesture of terror - the involuntary stretching-forth of one's hands or arms when suddenly faced with something terrifying; conversely, the "holding of one's arm [lit., "wing"] close to oneself" is expressive of freedom from fear. In the present instance, the phrase echoes the concluding words of verse 31 - "behold, thou art of those who are secure (in this world and in the next)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (28:32)

The "two signs" (burhanan) may be understood as Moses' ability to remain, by virtue of his certainty of God's omnipresence, forever free of all physical or moral fear, as well as his ability to show that appearance and reality are not always identical.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (28:37)

For an explanation of the above phrase, see surah 6 note 118.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (28:38)

In view of the fact that the ancient Egyptians worshipped many gods, this observation is not to be taken literally; but since each of the Pharaohs was regarded as an incarnation of the divine principle as such, he claimed - and received - his people's adoration as their "Lord All-Highest" (cf. 79:24), combining within himself, as it were, all the qualities attributable to gods.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (28:38)

Or: "ascend to the god of Moses". Whichever of the two meanings is given to the verb ittaliu, Pharaoh's demand for a "lofty tower" is not only an allusion to the building of one of the great pyramids, (see note 6 above) but also a derisory, contemptuous reference to Moses' concept of God as an all-embracing Power, inconceivably high above all that exists.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (28:39)

lit., "without (any) truth" or "justification" (bi-ghayr al-haqq).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (28:39)

Lit., "and they thought that they would not be brought back to Us". There is no doubt that the ancient Egyptians did believe in a life after death, and that this belief included the concept of a divine judgment as well. Since, however, the particular Pharaoh whom Moses confronted is said to have behaved with an arrogance opposed to all good sense, the Qur'an - by implication - likens his attitude to that of a person who does not believe in resurrection and in man's ultimate responsibility before God: hence my rendering of the conjunctive particle wa at the beginning of the above clause as "just as if".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (28:41)

Lit., "archetypes (aimmah) inviting to the fire". This is the pivotal sentence of the above fragment of the story of Moses. Just as verses 15-16 are meant to draw our attention to the sin of tribal or racial prejudice, the present reference to Pharaoh as an "archetype [of evil]" points to the fact that false pride (takabbur) and arrogance (istikbar) are truly "satanic" attitudes of mind, repeatedly exemplified in the Qur'an by Iblis's symbolic "revolt" against God (for the meaning of which see note 26 on 2:34 and note 31 on 15:41). Inasmuch as they are intrinsically evil, these "satanic" impulses lead to evil actions and, consequently, to a weakening or even a total destruction of man's spiritual potential: which, in its turn, is bound to cause suffering in the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (28:42)

I.e., in the pejorative connotation universally given to the adjective "pharaonic". It is to be noted that the term la'nah, here rendered as "curse", primarily denotes "estrangement" (ibad), i.e., from all that is good and, hence, really desirable.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (28:42)

I.e., among those who by their own actions will have removed themselves from God's grace: a meaning given to the term maqbuḥ, in this context, by most of the classical commentators and philologists (cf. Lisan al Arab, Taj al-'Arus, etc.).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (28:43)

By virtue of its being the first instance of a divinely-inspired Law, the Torah inaugurated a new phase in mankind's religious history (cf. the reference to the children of Israel as "forerunners in faith" in verse 5 of this surah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (28:44)

Implying that the story of Moses as narrated in the Qur'an could not have come to Muhammad's knowledge otherwise than through revelation: consequently, the Qur'an as such must obviously be a result of divine revelation. The term al-amr, rendered above as "the Law", is the Arabic equivalent of the Hebrew word torah ("law" or "precept"), the commonly accepted title of the revelation granted to Moses.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (28:45)

I.e., "thou art not the first of Our apostles, O Muhammad: We have sent thee to the people of thy time just as We sent Shu'ayb to the people of Madyan (Ad-Dahhak, as quoted by Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (28:46)

According to some of the classical commentators, this second reference to "the slope of Mount Sinai" contains an allusion to the divine assurance mentioned in 7:156: "My grace overspreads everything . . ." (Tabari, Razi). This interpretation is most plausible in view of the subsequent reference to Muhammad's mission as "an act of thy Sustainer's grace (rahmah)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (28:48)

As the Qur'an frequently points out, the basic ethical truths enunciated in it are the same as those of earlier revelations. It is this very statement which induced the opponents of Muhammad - in his own time as well as in later times - to question the authenticity of the Qur'an: "If it had really been revealed by God," they argue, "would so many of its propositions, especially its social laws, differ so radically from the laws promulgated in that earlier divine writ, the Torah?" By advancing this argument (and quite apart from the question of whether the text of the Bible as we know it today has or has not been corrupted in the course of time), the opponents of Muhammad's message deliberately overlook the fact, repeatedly stressed in the Qur'an, that the earlier systems of law were conditioned by the spiritual level of a particular people and the exigencies of a particular chapter of human history, and therefore had to be superseded by new laws at a higher stage of human development (see in this connection the second paragraph of 5:48 and the corresponding note 66). However, as is evident from the immediate sequence - and especially from the last sentence of this verse - the above specious argument is not meant to uphold the authenticity of the Bible as against that of the Qur'an, but, rather, aims at discrediting both - and, through them, the basic religious principle against which the irreligious mind always revolts: namely, the idea of divine revelation and of man's absolute dependence on and responsibility to God, the Ultimate Cause of all that exists.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (28:48)

A contemptuous allusion, on the one hand, to Old-Testament predictions of the coming of the Prophet Muhammad (cf. surah 2 note 33), and, on the other, to the oft-repeated Quranic statement that this divine writ had been revealed to "confirm the truth of earlier revelations". As regards my rendering of the term sihr (lit., "magic" or "sorcery") as "delusion" - and occasionally as "spellbinding eloquence" - see note 12 on 74:24.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (28:49)

I.e., the Torah and the Qur'an. The Gospel is not mentioned in this context because, as Jesus himself had stressed, his message was based on the Law of Moses, and was not meant to displace the latter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (28:50)

Lit., "if they do not respond to thee", implying that they are unable to accept the above challenge.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (28:51)

Lit., "We have caused this word to reach them gradually": this meaning is implied in the verbal form wassalna, which - like the grammatically identical form nazzalna - points to the gradual, step-by-step revelation of the Qur'an during the twenty-three years of Muhammad's prophetic ministry.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (28:52)

This is both a statement of historical fact - alluding to conversions of Jews and Christians in Muhammad's lifetime - and a prophecy. It must, however, be understood that, in the above context, God's "vouchsafing" revelation implies a conscious, sincere acceptance of its teachings by those to whom it has been conveyed: for it is this sincerity that has enabled them - or will enable them - to realize that the Qur'an preaches the same ethical truths as those forthcoming from earlier revelations. (Cf. 26:196-197 and the corresponding notes 83-85.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (28:54)

See note 44 on the identical phrase in 13:22. In the present context, the reference to "patience in adversity" and "repelling evil with good" evidently relates to the loss of erstwhile communal links, social ostracism, and all manner of physical or moral persecution which is so often the lot of persons who accept religious tenets different from those of their own community.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (28:55)

This obviously refers to attempts, based on prejudice, at deriding the spiritual re-orientation of the person concerned.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (28:56)

Or: "God guides whomever He wills" - either of these two renderings being syntactically correct. According to several extremely well authenticated Traditions, the above verse relates to the Prophet's inability to induce his dying uncle Abu Talib, whom he loved dearly and who had loved and protected him throughout his life, to renounce the pagan beliefs of his ancestors and to profess faith in God's oneness. Influenced by Abu Jahl and other Meccan chieftains, Abu Talib died professing, in his own words, "the creed of Abd al-Muttalib" (Bukhari) or, according to another version (quoted by Tabari), "the creed of my ancestors (al-ashyakh)". However, the Quranic statement "thou canst not guide aright everyone whom thou lovest" has undoubtedly a timeless import as well: It stresses the inadequacy of all human endeavours to "convert" any other person, however loving and loved, to one's own beliefs, or to prevent him from falling into what one regards as error, unless that person wills to be so guided.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (28:56)

The above rendering of the expression al-muhtadin conforms to the interpretations offered in this context by many classical commentators - e.g., "those who accept guidance" (Zamakhshari), "everyone who in time would find the right way" (Razi), "those who are prepared (musta'iddin) for it" (Baydawi), "all who deserve guidance" (Ibn Kathir), and so forth. Thus, God's guidance is but the final act of His grace with which He rewards all who desire to be guided. For a further consideration of this problem, the reader is referred to Zamakhshari's illuminating remarks quoted in the note 4 on 14:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (28:57)

Lit., If we were to follow the guidance together with thee, we would be snatched away from our land" (or "our soil"). This passage has obviously twofold connotation. On the historical plane, it echoes an objection voiced by many pagan Meccans to Muhammad's preaching: "If we were to accept thy call, most of the other tribes would regard this as a betrayal of our common ancestral beliefs, and would drive us away from our land." In a more general, timeless sense it reflects the hesitation of so many people - of whatever period, environment or religious persuasion - who, while realizing the truth of a new spiritual call, are yet fearful of acknowledging it as true lest this acknowledgment cause a total breach between them and their community and thus, as were, cut the ground from under their feet.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (28:57)

Like the preceding expression of fear, this Quranic answer, too, can be understood in two senses. In the limited, historical sense it is an allusion to Abraham's prayer that the land around the Kabah be made secure for all times and its natural barrenness be compensated by fruitful help from outside (cf. 14:35-41 also 2:126), and to God's acceptance of this prayer: thus, the Prophet's Meccan contemporaries are reminded that they need not fear to be dispossessed of this holy land so long as they remain righteous and trust in God. In its purely spiritual connotation, on the other hand, the "sanctuary secure" is God's promise - referred to in verse 61 below - that all who have faith in Him and are conscious of their responsibility to Him shall be graced with a sense of inner peace in this world and with enduring bliss in the life to come; and since they are thus to be rewarded with the "fruits" of all their good deeds, "no fear need they have, and neither shall they grieve" (cf. 2:62, 3:170, 5:69, 6:48, 7:35, 10:62, 46:13). See also note 59 on 29:67.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (28:58)

Lit., "We are indeed (kunna) the inheritors". For an explanation of my rendering of this phrase, see note 22 on 15:23. The above passage stresses the insignificance and brittleness of all worldly "advantages" as compared with the imperishable good of divine guidance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (28:59)

Sc., "and thus make them aware of the meaning of right and wrong": cf. 6:130-132 and the corresponding notes 116 and 117.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (28:59)

Cf. in this connection note 149 on 11:117. All the three passages referred to in this as well as the preceding note (i.e., 6:130-132, 11:117 and) are interdependent and must, therefore, be read side by side. The present passage connects with verse 58 above and its reference to "wanton wealth and ease of life", for the sake of which people so often wrong one another.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (28:61)

See second half of note 58.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (28:61)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (28:62)

Lit., "those partners of Mine whom you supposed [to exist]": see notes 15 and 16 on 6:22-23.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (28:63)

I.e., in the very fact of God's calling them to account (cf. 27:82 and the corresponding note 73). As the sequence shows, the persons thus addressed are the "leaders of thought" supposed to have set the community's faulty standards of social behaviour and moral valuation; and since they are primarily responsible for the wrong direction, which their followers have taken, they will be the first to suffer in the life to come.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (28:63)

I.e., "we did not lead them astray out of malice, but simply because we ourselves had been led astray by our predecessors". This "answer" is, of course, evasive, but it is quoted here to show that man's attachment to false - but nevertheless, almost deified - values and concepts based on stark materialism is, more often than not, a matter of "social continuity": in other words, the validity of those materialistic pseudo-values is taken for granted simply because they are time-honoured, with every generation blindly subscribing to the views held by their forebears. In its deepest sense, this passage - as so many similar ones throughout the Qur'an - points to the moral inadmissibility of accepting an ethical or intellectual proposition as true on no other grounds than that it was held to be true by earlier generations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (28:63)

In other words, they were but wont to worship their own passions and desires projected onto extraneous beings. See in this connection 10:28, especially note 46 and 34:41 and the corresponding notes 52 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (28:64)

Lit., "those [God-] partners of yours". See note 64 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (28:64)

For this rendering of the phrase law kanu yahtadun, see second note 56 on verse 56 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (28:65)

This connects with the first sentence of verse 59, which has been explained in the corresponding note 60. The present verse clearly implies that those sinners had not responded to the guidance offered them by God's apostles. As in many other instances in the Qur'an, God's "question" is but meant to stress a moral failure, which by now has become obvious to man's self-accusing conscience.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (28:66)

Lit., "will on that Day have become obscured to them". The operative noun anba, which literally denotes "tidings", has here the compound meaning of "arguments and excuses" (Tabari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (28:66)

I.e., they will all be equally confused. For the above rendering of la yatasa alun (lit., "they will not [be able to] ask one another"), see the explanations of this phrase advanced by Baghawi, Zamakhshari and Baydawi.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (28:67)

I.e., during his life in this world. For an explanation of this stress on repentance - which flows from one's realization of moral failure see surah 24 note 41.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (28:68)

Some of the classical commentators incline to interpret the ma in the phrase ma kana lahum al-khirah as a particle of negation and the noun khirah as "choice" or "freedom of choice", thus giving to this phrase the meaning of "He chooses, [but] they [i.e., human beings] have no freedom of choice". To my mind, however, this interpretation conflicts not only with the immediately preceding passages but with the tenor of the Qur'an as a whole, which insists throughout on man's responsibility for (and, hence, on relative freedom in) choosing between right and wrong - and this side by side with its stress on God's unlimited power to determine the factual course of events. Hence, I prefer to base my rendering on the interpretation advanced and convincingly argued by Tabari, who regards the crucial particle ma not as a negation but as a relative pronoun synonymous with alladhi ("that which" or "whatever"), and understands the noun khirah in its primary significance of "that which is chosen" or "preferred", i.e., because it is considered to be the best: in another word, as a synonym of khayr. Zamakhshari refers to this interpretation with evident approval (without, however, mentioning Tabari specifically), and enlarges upon it thus: "God chooses for mankind whatever is best (ma huwa khayr) and most beneficial (aslah) for them, for He knows better than they themselves do what is good for them."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (28:70)

Or: "in this first [i.e., present life] as well as in the life to come".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 76 (28:71)

Lit., "who [i.e., "where"] is a deity", etc., obviously implying that no such "deity" exists.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (28:72)

I.e., "Will you not recognize the miracle of planned and purposeful creation?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 78 (28:74)

I.e., the Day of Resurrection - thus reverting to the theme enunciated in verses 62-66 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 79 (28:74)

This repetition of God's "question", already mentioned in verse 62 above, is meant to stress the utter inability of the sinners concerned to justify their erstwhile attitude rationally; hence my interpolation at the beginning of the next verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 80 (28:75)

I.e., the prophets who had appeared at various stages of man's history, and who will now bear witness that they had duly conveyed God's message to the people for whom it was meant.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 81 (28:75)

Lit., "Produce your evidence" - i.e., for the possibility of anyone or anything having a share in God's divinity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 82 (28:75)

I.e., that He is the Ultimate Reality, and that whatever is or could be is an outcome of His will alone.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 83 (28:75)

For the meaning of the phrase ma kanu yaftarun (lit., "all that they were wont to invent" - rendered by me here as well as in 6:24, 7:53, 10:30, 11:21 and 16:87 as "all their false imagery"); see surah 11 note 42 also note 15 on 6:22. A specific instance of such "false imagery" the futility of man's relying on his own wealth and worldly power - is illustrated in the immediately following legend of Qarun (see next note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 84 (28:76)

The structure of the above sentence is meant to show that even a person who had been a follower of one of the greatest of Gods apostles was not above the possibility of sinning under the influence of false pride and self-exaltation - a particular example of the "false imagery" referred to in the preceding passage. The conventional "identification" of Qarun with the Korah of the Old Testament (Numbers xvi) is neither relevant nor warranted by the Quranic text, the more so as the purport of this legend is a moral lesson and not a historical narrative. This, by the way, explains also the juxtaposition, elsewhere in the Qur'an (29:39 and 40:24), of Qarun with Pharaoh, the arch-sinner.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 85 (28:76)

The term usbah denotes a company of ten or more (up to forty) persons; since it is used here metonymically, pointing to the great weight involved, it is best rendered as above. The noun mafatih is a plural of both miftah or ("key") and maftah ("that which is under lock and key", i.e., a "hoard of wealth" or "treasure chest"), which latter meaning is obviously the one intended in the present context.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 86 (28:77)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 92 (28:83)

This last clause makes it clear that, in order to have spiritual value, man's "not seeking" worldly grandeur or self-indulgence in things depraved must be an outcome, not of indifference or of a lack of opportunity, but solely of a conscious moral choice.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 95 (28:85)

According to Mujahid (as quoted by Tabari), the phrase farada alayka is almost synonymous with a'taka, "He gave [it] to thee". This, however, elucidates only one part of the above complex expression, which, I believe, has here a meaning similar to that of faradnaha ("We laid it down in plain terms") occurring in the first verse of surah 24 An-Nur) and explained in the corresponding note 1. In the present context, the particle alayka ("upon thee"), with its pronominal suffix, gives to the above clause the additional meaning of a moral obligation on the part of the recipient of the Quranic message to conform his or her way of life to its teachings; hence my compound rendering of the phrase.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 96 (28:85)

The term ma'ad denotes, literally, "a place [or "a state"] to which one returns", and, tropically, one's "ultimate destination" or "ultimate condition"; in the present context, it is obviously synonymous with "life in the hereafter". This is how most of the classical authorities interpret the above phrase. But on the vague assumption that this passage is addressed exclusively to the Prophet, some commentators incline to the view that the noun has here a specific, purely physical connotation - "a place of return" - allegedly referring to God's promise to His Apostle (given during or after the latter's exodus from Mecca to Medina) that one day he would return victoriously to the city of his birth. To my mind, however, the passage has a much deeper meaning, unconnected with any place or specific point in history: it is addressed to every believer, and promises not only a continuation of life after bodily death but also a spiritual rebirth, in this world, to anyone who opens his heart to the message of the Qur'an and comes to regard it as binding on himself.

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 1 (28:4)

Prophet Joseph son of prophet Israel Jacob had died around 1600 BC. His successors gradually lost control of the government and the native Egyptians started up a slow but steady rebellion against the Israelites. About a century later around 1500 BC, the Egyptians wrested control of the government and established a Kingdom. The Egyptian Kings from then on assumed the title of 'Pharaoh'. They began persecuting the Israelites about 1400 BC and this persecution reached its zenith in the times of prophet Moses, under the rule of Pharaoh Ramses II, 1290 To 1224 BC

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 2 (28:6)

'Feared from the Israelites': The Israelites in Egypt had allied with the invading Hyksos dynasty 1700-1580 BC. See 12:44. Haaman: This Hamaan is quite different from the Persian Hamaan of the Old Testament who was an adviser to the Persian King Xerxes, who ruled eight hundred years later, from 486 To 465 BC. 'Hamaan' of Pharaoh derives his name from the title borne by every successive High Priest of the Egyptian Kingdom. 'Ha-Amen' = High Priest of the Egyptian god Amon. So the Hamaan mentioned in the Qur'an refers to the High Priest during the reign of Ramses II. The ability to translate the hieroglyphic language system of the Egyptians had been utterly lost for centuries at the time of the revelation of the Qur'an, and would remain lost until the year 1799. After the discovery in that year of the Rosetta Stone, scholars were able to unlock the mystery of the hieroglyphs and, eventually, to confirm that there was really a Hamaan, unmentioned in the Hebrew scriptures, who was close to this Pharaoh in this period, and who was involved in construction of towers and of temples just as the Qur'an says. This information is important to bear in mind in order to avoid confusion. Some historical records propose that the Pyramids of Egypt began to be built under the royal decree of one of the Pharaohs. The Qur'an alludes to that possibility in 38:12

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 3 (28:7)

The mother of Moses was the wife of Amram (Imran). They had three children: Miriam, Aaron and See 21:10. Faradha = Made it incumbent = Made it a binding duty. Ma'aad = The ultimate destination = The final state or condition = The Hereafter (for taking account). I agree with Muhammad Asad and other exponents that the second person singular in this verse applies to every person who chooses Al-Qur'an as the Guide. From then on, it is a change of direction to a new destination in this world and in the Hereafter. Based on fabricated history, some exponents have taken Ma'aad to mean Makkah, thus restricting the Glorious Book as a duty to the exalted prophet alone, and freeing Muslims and other people from their noblest duty towards the Qur'an! Is not the Book a comprehensive guide the understanding of which is incumbent upon all humanity? Is it not all about us humans? Did the prophet (S) return to Makkah as his final destination? Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 2 (28:43)

The Torah is the collection of all the scriptures revealed to all the prophets of Israel, including the book of Moses. The Quran consistently states that Moses was given a book, or "the Statute Book." Nowhere in the Quran do we see that Moses was given "the Torah." Today's Old Testament, therefore, is the Torah (see 3:50, 5:46).

Edip-Layth	29:17 "You are serving nothing but idols besides Him, and you are creating fabrications. Those that you serve besides God do not possess for you any provisions, so seek with God the provision and serve Him and be thankful to Him; to Him you will return."
The Monotheist Group	29:17 "You are worshipping nothing but idols besides Him, and you are creating fabrications. Those that you worship besides God do not possess for you any provisions, so seek with God the provision and serve Him and be thankful to Him; to Him you will return."

Muhammad Asad	29:17 You worship only [lifeless] idols instead of God, and [thus] you give visible shape to a lie! ¹³ Behold, those [things and beings] that you worship instead of God have it not in their power to provide sustenance for you: seek, then, all [your] sustenance from God, and worship Him [alone] and be grateful to Him: [for] unto Him you shall be brought back!
Rashad Khalifa	29:17 "What you worship instead of GOD are powerless idols; you have invented a lie."
Shabbir Ahmed	29:17 You worship idols instead of God and spread false news about their powers. Those you worship instead of God (such as the priesthood of the temple) do not own your provision. (If you establish the Divine System), God will guarantee honorable provision for you. Then, serve Him alone and be grateful by sharing His bounties with others. Unto Him you shall be brought back.

The Monotheist Group	29:18 "And if you disbelieve, then nations before you have also disbelieved." The messenger is only required to deliver clearly.
Muhammad Asad	29:18 And if you give [me] the lie - well, [other] communities have given the lie [to Gods prophets] before your time: but no more is an apostle bound to do than clearly deliver the message [entrusted to him]."
Rashad Khalifa	God: The Only Source of Provisions 29:18 If you disbelieve, generations before you have also disbelieved. The sole function of the messenger is to deliver (the message).
Shabbir Ahmed	29:18 And if you reject (the message), so did communities before you (and suffered the consequences). The duty of the messenger is only to convey the message clearly and publicly. ⁶

Muhammad Asad	29:21 He causes to suffer whomever He wills, and bestows His mercy on whomever He wills; and unto Him you shall be made to return:
Rashad Khalifa	29:21 He condemns to retribution whomever He wills, and showers His mercy upon whomever He wills. Ultimately, to Him you will be turned over.

Rashad Khalifa	Back to Abraham 29:24 The only response from his people was their saying, "Kill him, or burn him." But GOD saved him from the fire. This should provide lessons for people who believe.
Shabbir Ahmed	29:24 (Abraham explained these facts to his people) but their only answer was, "Slay him or burn him alive!" But God saved him from their fiery rage. In this history, there are lessons for believers (such as, when people have no sensible answers, they resort to threats and violence. 21:68, 37:96-97).

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (29:1)

A1L30M40. This combination of letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. See 74:1-56; 1:1; 2:1; 13:38; 27:82; 38:1-8; 40:28-38; 46:10; 72:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (29:13)

None will be held responsible for the sin of another person (6:164). A person aiding another person to commit a sin or evil, shares the responsibility together with the person who committed (4:85).

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (29:14)

Until God revealed the secret code prophesied in chapter 74, we did not have a satisfactory answer to the question, why "one thousand minus fifty instead of the conventional expression, nine hundred and fifty?" Every element of the Quran, its chapters, verses, words, and letters, including its numbers, plays a role in the mathematical structure of the Quran. For instance, the sum of all the different numbers in the Quran without repetition gives us 162146 (19x8534). If the expression in the verse was "nine hundred and fifty," then the sum would be 900 extra and would not participate in the numerical system based on code 19. Furthermore, the age of Noah being a multiple of 19 also supports this relationship. It seems too difficult to accept such a long lifespan for a human being. Since, the Quran contains its own scientific authentication, we have no choice but to trust this apparently incredible information. The Bible too gives 950 as Noah's age (Genesis 9:29). Chapter eleven of Genesis mentions nine names who lived more than a hundred years, such as Shem (600), Arphaxad (438), Salah (433), Eber (464), Peleg (239), Reu (239), Serug (230), Terah (205),

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (29:15)

See 11:40-44.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (29:19)

The verse implies that evolution is a divinely designed and guided method of creation. A critic citing 96:2; 15:26; 3:59; 19:67; and 16:4 may ask the following question: "What was man created from: blood, clay, dust, or nothing?" The criticism is a classic example of the either/or fallacy, or the product of a frozen mind that does not consider or perceive time and evolution as reality. If the critic uses the same standard, the critic of these verses will find contradictions in almost every book. If he looks into biology books, he will similarly get confused. In one page he will learn that he is made of atoms, in other made of cells, of DNA, sperm, egg, embryo, earthly materials, etc. He would express his disbelief and confusion with a similar question. A careful and educated reading of the Quran will reveal the following facts about creation: 1. There were times when man did not exist. Billions of years after the creation of the universe, humans were created. In other words, we were nothing before we were created (19:67). 2. Humans were created according to a divinely guided evolution (29:19-20; 71:14-17). 3. Creation of man started from clay (15:26). Our Creator started the biological evolution of microscopic organisms within the layers of clay. Donald E. Ingber, professor at Harvard University, in an article titled "The Architecture of Life" published as the cover story of Scientific American stated the following: "Researchers now think biological evolution began in layers of clay, rather than in the primordial sea. Interestingly, clay is itself a porous network of atoms arranged geodesically within octahedral and tetrahedral forms. But because these octahedra and tetrahedra are not closely packed, they retain the ability to move and slide relative to one another. This flexibility apparently allows clay to catalyze many chemical reactions, including ones that may have produced the first molecular building blocks of organic life." Humans are the most advanced fruits of organic life started millions of years ago from layers of clay. 4. Human being is made of water (21:30). The verse above not only emphasizes the importance of water as an essential ingredient for organic life, but also clearly refers to the beginning of the universe, which we now call the Big Bang. The Quran's information regarding cosmology is centuries ahead of its time. For instance, verse 51:47 informs us that the universe is continuously expanding. Furthermore, the Quran informs us that the universe will collapse back to its origin, confirming the closed universe model (21:104). Verse 24:45 repeats the role of water in creation and follows with a classification of animals according to their ability to move around and mentions "two legs." Walking on two legs is a crucial point in the evolution of humanoids. Walking on two feet may initially appear to be insignificant in the evolutionary process, yet many scientists believe that walking on two feet had a significant contribution in human evolution by enabling Homo Erectus to use tools and gain consciousness, thereby leading to Homo Sapiens. 5. The human being is made of dust, or earth, which contains the essential elements for life (3:59). 6. Human being is the product of long-term evolution, and when human sperm and egg, which consist of water and earthly elements, meet each other in right conditions, they evolve into embryo, fetus, and finally, after 266 days into a human being (75:37; 16:4; 96:2; 22:5). We do not translate the Arabic word alaq as "clot"; since neither in interspecies evolution nor intraspecies evolution, is there a stage where the human is a "clot". This is a traditional mistranslation of the word, and the error was first noticed by the medical doctor Maurice Bucaille. Any decent Arabic dictionary will give you three definitions for the word alaq: (1) clot; (2) hanging thing; (3) leech. Early commentators of the Quran, lacking the knowledge of embryology, justifiably picked the "clot" as the meaning of the word. However, the author of the Quran, by this multiple-meaning word was referring to embryo, which hangs to the lining of uterus and nourishes itself like a leech. In modern times, we do not have an excuse for picking the wrong meaning. This is one of the many examples of the Quran's language in verses related to science and mathematics: while its words provide a kind of understanding to former generations, its real meaning shines with knowledge of God's creation and natural laws. See 95:2.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (29:20)

Scientists who followed God's instruction in this verse gathered many evidences regarding the evolution of human creation. Archeological findings show that, following the laws of an intelligent design, life started from simpler organisms and evolved through genetic mutations and cumulative selection. See 7:69; 15:26-28; 24:45; 71:14-17.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (29:25)

Peer pressure, especially on religious and cultural issues, creates formidable psychological walls, social, political and economic deterrence that discourages the individual from questioning, reasoning and examining the religious teachings and cultural norms dictated onto him/her. That is why there is a relation between religion and geography. Abraham was one of those rare brave individuals who stood on his own feet, broke the walls of conformity, and rejected the notion that society, or the number of followers, is the criterion for deciding between truth and falsehood. Only philosophical inquiry can free the person from the piles of falsehood and superstition that accumulate in the culture of societies because of ruling classes who wish to keep the status quo. We salute Abraham. We salute all those who question assumptions and traditions of organized religions. Blessed are those who seek truth, who do not rush to conclusion, who examine assumptions and assertions, and do not hesitate to embrace truth when it becomes evident. See 6:74-83; 21:58.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (29:39)

The three institutions/powers that comprised the fascist Egyptian regime and many other systems in history are referred by three characters: Pharaoh represents politics, Qarun represents economic monopoly, and Haman represents the military. What about magicians? Which institution/power do they represent? How do they contribute to the system that aims to accumulate power and wealth in the hands of the few? See 7:112-116; 28:38; 40:24-36. For the magicians of the New Testament, see, 1 Peter 2:13-21; Ephesians 6:5-9; Timothy 2:11-14. The word Haman is not a proper name, but a title of Egyptian origin, a contraction of Ham-Amon, meaning high priest of god, Amon. The Haman mentioned in the Quran has nothing to do with the Haman mentioned in the Old Testament (Esther 3:1; 7:10).

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (29:41)

The example is interesting. The spider is not the male one (ankab), but a female one (ankabut). Thus, it might be referring to spiders like the Black Widow that eats their males after having an intimate relationship. (The grammatical structure of the verse is similar to that of 40:20).

Edip-Layth - End Note 10 (29:45)

Sala prayer is a periodic mental connection and communication with God. We should commemorate God alone in our prayers (20:14). Mentioning the names of Muhammad, Ali, Wali, or any other creature contradicts the purpose of sala prayer as defined by God.

God unveiled the prophecy of the hidden code 19 in chapter 74, in year 1974 to a biochemist that made the first computerized study of the Quran (27:82; 74:1-56). This was exactly 1406 (19x74) lunar years after the revelation of the Quran. The fulfillment of the prophecy opened a new era and started a powerful reformation movement. For the word ZKR (reminder), see 15:9; 21:2; 21:24,105; 26:5; 38:1,8; 41:41; 44:13; 72:17; 74:31,49,54.

I.e., the suffering which is bound to befall in the hereafter all who abandon their faith for fear of being persecuted in this world. It is to be borne in mind that a mere outward renunciation of faith under torture or threat of death is not considered a sin in Islam, although martyrdom for the sake of one's faith is the highest degree of merit to which man can attain.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (29:10)

I.e., when it is no longer risky to be counted as one of them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (29:11)

This is probably the earliest occurrence of the term munafiq in the chronology of Quranic revelation. Idiomatically, the term is derived from the noun nafaq, which denotes an underground passage" having an outlet different from the entry, and signifying, specifically, the complicated burrow of a field-mouse, a lizard, etc., from which the animal can easily escape or in which it can outwit a pursuer. Tropically, the term munafiq describes a person who is "two-faced", inasmuch as he always tries to find an easy way out of any real commitment, be it spiritual or social, by adapting his course of action to what promises to be of practical advantage to him in the situation in which he happens to find himself. Since a person thus characterized usually pretends to be morally better than he really is, the epithet munafiq may roughly be rendered as "hypocrite". It should, however, be noted that whereas this Western term invariably implies conscious dissembling with the intent to deceive others, the Arabic term munafiq may also be applied - and occasionally is applied in the Qur'an - to a person who, being weak or uncertain in his beliefs or moral convictions, merely deceives himself. Hence, while using in my rendering of the Quranic text the conventional expression "hypocrite", I have endeavoured to point out the above differentiation, whenever possible and necessary, in my explanatory notes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (29:12)

The above "saying" of the deniers of the truth is, of course, but a metonym for their attitude towards the believers: hence my interpolation, between brackets, of the words "as it were". The implication is that people who deny the validity of any spiritual commitment arising out of one's faith in "something that is beyond the reach of human perception" (al-ghayb) - in this case, the existence of God - are, as a rule, unwilling to tolerate such a faith and such a commitment in others as well: and so they endeavour to bring the believers to their way of thinking by a sarcastic, contemptuous reference to the alleged irrelevance of the concept of "sin" as such.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (29:12)

Lit., "bear" - implying a reduction of the burden which the others would have to bear (Razi). See also next note.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (29:13)

Cf. the Prophet's saying: "Whoever calls [others] unto the right way shall have a reward equal to the [combined] rewards of all who may follow him until Resurrection Day, without anything being lessened of their rewards; and whoever calls unto the way of error will have to bear a sin equal to the [combined] sins of all who may follow him until Resurrection Day, without anything being lessened of their sins" (Bukhari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (29:14)

This passage connects with verse 2 above. "We did test those who lived before them". The story of Noah and of his failure to convert his people occurs in the Qur'an several times, and most extensively in 11:25-48. In the present instance it is meant to illustrate the truth that no one - not even a prophet - can bestow faith on another person (cf. 28:56 - "thou canst not guide aright everyone whom thou lovest"). The same purport underlies the subsequent references, in verses 16-40, to other prophets.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (29:14)

Sc., "and despite this great length of time was unable to convince them of the truth of his mission". The identical figure - 950 years - is given in the Bible (Genesis ix, 29) as Noah's life span. By repeating this element of the Biblical legend, the Qur'an merely stresses the fact that the duration of a prophet's mission has nothing to do with its success or failure, since "all true guidance is God's guidance" (3:73) - and, as we are so often told in the Qur'an, "God guides [only] him that wills [to be guided]". Thus, the reference to Noah is meant to reassure the believer who may be distressed at seeing the majority of his fellow-men refuse to accept, all at once a truth which appears self-evident to him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (29:17)

Lit., you create a lie".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (29:19)

This passage -consisting of verses 19-23 - is parenthetically placed in the midst of the story of Abraham, connecting with the latter's reference to resurrection at the end of verse 17 ("unto Him you shall he brought back"). The ever-recurring emergence, decay and re-emergence of life, so vividly exemplified in all organic nature, is often cited in the Qur'an not merely in support of the doctrine of resurrection, but also as evidence of a consciously-devised plan underlying creation as such - and, thus, of the existence of the Creator.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (29:20)

Cf., for example, 23:12-14, which alludes to mans coming into existence out of most primitive elements, and gradually evolving into a highly complex being endowed not only with a physical body but also with a mind, with feelings, and instincts.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (29:23)

Implying that such people deprive themselves of God's grace and mercy (which is the twofold significance of the term rahmah in this context) by rejecting all belief in His existence: in other words, belief in God - or one's readiness to believe in Him - is, in and by itself, already an outcome of His grace and mercy, just as suffering in the hereafter is an outcome of ones being "bent on denying the truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (29:24)

Lit., "the answer of his people was nothing but that they said" - thus connecting with the passage ending with verse 18.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (29:24)

For an explanation of the concept of hijrah and of my above rendering of the term muhajir, see surah 2, note 203, and surah 4, note 24. In the present instance this term is obviously used in both its physical and spiritual senses, analogous to the earlier allusion (in 19:48-49) to Abraham's "withdrawal" (I'tizal) from his evil, native environment and to his physical migration to Harran (in northern Mesopotamia), and thence to Syria and Palestine. The story of lot (Lut) is mentioned in the Qur'an several times, and particularly in 11:69-83.

See note 62 on 7:78 (a passage, which relates to the tribe of Thamud), and note 73 on 7:91.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (29:38)

See surah 7 second half of note 48 and note 56.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (29:38)

As regards the tribe of Ad, the above seems to be an allusion to their one-time capital, the legendary "Iram the many-pillared" (mentioned in the Qur'an only once, namely, in 89:7). It has since been buried by the moving sand dunes of Al-Ahqaf (a region between Uman and Hadramawt, within the great South-Arabian desert of Rub al-Khali); it is said, however, that its traces are occasionally uncovered by strong winds. For an explanation of the reference to the dwellings of the Thamud, see note 59 on 7:74.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (29:38)

Thus, the Qur'an implies that it is man's "ability to perceive the truth" (istibsar) that makes him morally responsible for his doings and, hence, for his failure to resist his own evil impulses - which is evidently the meaning of "Satan" in this context. See in this connection 14:22 and the corresponding notes 31 and 33.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (29:39)

As regards Qarun, see 28:76 ff. and, in the corresponding note 84; for Haman, note 6 on 28:6. The common denominator between these two and Pharaoh is their false pride (takabbur) and arrogance (istikbar), which cause them to become "archetypes of evil" (cf. 28:41 and the corresponding note 40). A similar attitude of mind is said to have been characteristic of the tribes of Ad and Thamud, mentioned in the preceding verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (29:40)

Sc., "of Gods punishment": cf. note 98 on 11:67.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (29:42)

Lit., "whatever thing they invoke instead of Him": i.e., He knows the nothingness of those false objects of worship (Zamakhshari), irrespective of whether they be imaginary deities, or deified saints, or forces of nature, or even false concepts or ideas; but He also knows the weakness of the human heart and mind and, hence, the hidden motivation of all such irrational worship.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (29:43)

Inasmuch as awareness of the existence of God is here postulated as a prerequisite of a full understanding of the Quranic parables (and, by implication, allegories as well), the above verse should be read side by side with the statement that the Qur'an is meant to be "a guidance for all the God-conscious, who believe in the existence of a reality which is beyond the reach of human perception" (see 2:2-3 and the corresponding note 3).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (29:44)

I.e., endowed with meaning and purpose: see surah 10 note 11. In other words, belief in the existence of a meaning and a purpose underlying the creation of the universe is a logical corollary of one's belief in God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (29:45)

If we assume that verses 45-46 are addressed not merely to the Prophet but to believers in general (an assumption which is strengthened by the plural form of address in the last clause of verse 45 and throughout verse 46), the above phrase may be taken to mean "whatever of the divine writ has revealed itself to thy understanding".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (29:45)

For an explanation of this rendering of the term and concept of al-munkar, see surah 16 note 109.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (29:46)

Sc., "and are therefore not accessible to friendly argument": the implication being that in such cases all disputes should a priori be avoided. As regards religious discussions in general, see note 149 on 16:125.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (29:47)

I.e., "in this spirit": a reference to the sameness of the fundamental truths in all revealed religions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (29:47)

I.e., "they to whom We grant the ability to understand this divine writ".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (29:47)

This rendering of the verb jahada - in the present instance and in verse 49 below (as well as in 31:32, 40:63 or 41:28) - in the sense of a person's denying or rejecting something which he knows to be true is based on the authority of Zamakhshari's Asas.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (29:48)

Lit., "with thy right hand" - the term yamin being used here metonymically, denoting no more than one's "own hand". It is historically established that Muhammad, the "unlettered prophet" (cf. 7:157 and 158), could neither read nor write, and could not, therefore, have derived his extensive knowledge of the contents of earlier revelations from the Bible or other scriptures: which - as the Qur'an points out - ought to convince any unprejudiced person that this knowledge must have come to him through divine revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (29:48)

The participial noun mubtil is derived from the verb abtala, "he made a false [or "vain"] claim", or "tried to disprove the truth [of something]", or "to reduce [something] to nothing", or "to prove [it] to be of no account" or "null and void", or "unfounded", "false", "spurious", etc., irrespective of whether the object is true or false, authentic or spurious, valid or unfounded (Lisan al-Arab and Taj al-'Arus).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (29:49)

Lit., "self-evident (bayvinat) in the breasts of those who have been given knowledge" - the term ilm having here the connotation of intuitive, spiritual perception.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (29:50)

See note 94 on 6:109.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (29:51)

I.e., "are the contents of this revelation not enough for them to make them grasp its intrinsic truth without the help of 'miraculous proofs' of its divine origin?" (Cf. note 60 on the last sentence of 7:75.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (29:53)

See note 32 on 8:32.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (29:55)

I.e., from all directions and from many causes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (29:56)

Implying that since the earth offers innumerable, multiform facilities to human life, there is no excuse for forgetting God "owing to the pressure of adverse circumstances". Whenever or wherever the worship of God - in its essential, and not merely liturgical sense - becomes impossible, the believer is obliged to "forsake the domain of evil" (which, as explained in note 124 on 4:97, is the innermost meaning of the concept of hijrah) and to "migrate unto God", that is, to a place where it is possible to live in accordance with one's faith.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (29:60)

Lit., "that does not bear [or "assume responsibility for"] its sustenance" - i.e., is either too weak to fend for itself or (according to Al-Hasan, as quoted by Zamakhshari) does not store up provisions for the morrow. This passage connects with the reference at the end of the preceding verse to "those who in their Sustainer place their trust".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (29:61)

Regarding my rendering of la'in as "thus it is: if," etc., see surah 30 note 45. The people spoken of in the sequence are such as do acknowledge the existence of God but have only a vague idea as to what this acknowledgment implies or should imply.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (29:61)

See surah 5 note 90. The perversion consists in their thinking that they really "believe in God" and nevertheless worshipping false values and allegedly "divine" powers side by side with Him: all of which amounts to a virtual denial of His almightiness and uniqueness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (29:62)

Sc., "and, hence knows what is really good and, from the viewpoint of His unfathomable plan, necessary for each living being".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (29:66)

The particle li prefixed to the subsequent verbs yakfuru ("they show [utter] ingratitude") and yatamatta'u ("they enjoy" or "go on enjoying") their worldly life") is not an indication of intent ("so that" or "in order that") but merely of a causal sequence; in the above context, it may be appropriately rendered as "and thus".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (29:67)

See note 58 on 28:57. In contrast to the "sanctuary secure" the inner peace and sense of spiritual fulfillment which God bestows on those who truly believe in Him - the atheist or agnostic is more often than not exposed to fear of the Unknown and a despair born of the uncertainty as to what will happen to him after death.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (29:68)

I.e., by persuading himself that there is, side by side with God or even independently of Him, any "power" that could govern men's destinies.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (29:69)

Lit., "Our paths". The plural used here is obviously meant to stress the fact - alluded to often in the Qur'an - that there are many paths, which lead to a cognizance (marifah) of God.

However, unjust systems wither away regardless of how smartly they are run. The capital of 'Aad was the legendary Iram, the Town of Pillars that lies buried in the sand dunes of the second largest desert in the world after the African Sahara. Called Ruba' al-Khali' = The Empty Quarter, this desert covers much of the Southeastern Arabian Peninsula. Iram is mentioned in 89:7. The Tribe of Thamud had descended from 'Aad and is, therefore, frequently referred to in history and ancient Arabic poetry as 'Aad-e-thani (Second 'Aad). Inscriptions and records dating as far back as 715 BC refer to them as Thamudenes and Thamudaei (writings of Aristo, Ptolemy, Pliny). Rock inscriptions, dwellings and tombs decorated with animal sculptures still exist in the valley of Al-Hijr from Northern Hijaz to Syria. Edip-Layth	Monotheism: A Natural and Rational System 30:28 An example is cited for you from among yourselves: are there any from among those who are still dependant that are partners to you in what provisions We have given you that you become equal therein? Would you fear them as you fear each other? It is such that We clarify the signs for a people who have sense.
The Monotheist Group	30:28 An example is put forth for you from among yourselves: are there any from among those who are committed to you by oath that are partners to you in what provisions We have given you that you become equal therein? Would you fear them as you fear each other? It is such that We clarify the revelations for a people who have sense.
Muhammad Asad	30:28 He propounds unto you a parable drawn from your own life: ²⁰ Would you [agree to] have some of those whom your right hands possess ²¹ as [full-fledged] partners in whatever We may have bestowed upon you as sustenance, so that you [and they] would have equal shares in it, and you would fear [to make use of it without consulting] them, just as you might fear [the more powerful of] your equals? ²² Thus clearly do We spell out these messages unto people who use their reason.
Rashad Khalifa	Absurdity of Idol Worship 30:28 He cites for you herein an example from among yourselves: Do you ever elevate your servants or subordinates to the level where they rival you, and to the point that you pay them as much allegiance as is being paid to you? We thus explain the revelations for people who understand.
Shabbir Ahmed	30:28 He gives you an example from your own society. Would you agree to make your employees equal partners in the provision We have bestowed upon you? Are you as mindful of them as you are mindful of yourselves? (So do you conceive of a 'discriminating' God!) Thus We explain Our messages for people who use their intellect.

The Monotheist Group	30:37 Did they not see that God grants the provisions for whom He wills, and He is able? In that are signs for a people who believe.
Muhammad Asad	30:37 Are they, then, not aware that it is God who grants abundant sustenance, or gives it in scant measure, unto whomever He wills? In this, behold, there are messages indeed for people who will believe!
Rashad Khalifa	30:37 Do they not realize that GOD increases the provision for whomever He wills, or reduces it? These should be lessons for people who believe.
Shabbir Ahmed	30:37 Have they not seen that God enlarges the provision on whatever (community) it is, according to His laws, and restricts it likewise? Herein are signs for people who believe (in the Divine laws).

The Monotheist Group	30:38 So give the relative his due, and the poor, and the wayfarer. That is best for those who seek God's presence, and they are the successful ones.
Muhammad Asad	30:38 Hence, give his due to the near of kin, as well as to the needy and the wayfarer; 34 this is best for all who seek God's countenance: for it is they, they that shall attain to a happy state!
Rashad Khalifa	30:38 Therefore, you shall give the relatives their rightful share (of charity), as well as the poor, and the traveling alien. This is better for those who sincerely seek GOD's pleasure; they are the winners.
Shabbir Ahmed	30:38 So, give the relatives their rightful share, and to the needy, and the one whose business has stalled, the one who has lost his job, the one whose hard-earned income is insufficient to meet the basic needs, the homeless son of the street, and the needy traveler and the one who has traveled to you for help. A1L30M40. These letters/numbers play an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. See 74:1-56; 1:1; 2:1; 13:38; 27:82; 38:1-8; 40:28-38; 46:10; 72:28. 030:002-05 You might have noticed that we translated the reference of the verb "GHaLaBa" differently than the traditional translations. Instead of reading the verb in 30:2 as "ghulibat" (were defeated) we read as "ghalabat" which means just the opposite, "defeated." Similarly, we also read its continuous/future tense in the following verse differently. The prophecy of the verse was realized in 636, four years after the death of Muhammad, when Muslims confronted the army of Byzantine Empire around Yarmuk river, in one of the most significant battles in history. Under the command of Khalid bin Walid, the Muslim army beat the Christian imperial army of four or more times their numbers. The six- day war, Yarmuk, occurred in area near the Sea of Galilee and Dead Sea, which are located in the lowest land depression on earth, 200-400 meters below sea level.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (30:21)

Marriage must be based on mutual love and care between man and woman. Maintaining and improving love and care requires steady attention, compromise, respect and patience. One spouse should not try to control or suppress the individuality or identity of the other. Marrying through arranged marriages, without the bride and groom seeing and meeting each other, is against God's law in nature, since God must have had a purpose to create man handsome and woman beautiful. Our brain considers the geometric average or the composite of all faces we see as a visual measure for attractiveness. God did not design the package to be ignored at the time it is needed the most. Indeed, physical attraction is mentioned as a main factor in marriage (33:52; 24:30). For divorce, see 2:226-230. For celibacy, see 57:27.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (30:22)

In the past, and even in the present, some paranoid majorities banned the language of minorities, because of their differences in color, race, or culture. Totalitarian or racist regimes that ban the language and identity of a group will suffer the consequences of fighting against God's signs. The tradition of changing the names of converts to Arabic names was a diabolic invention started centuries later as an expression of Arab nationalism and cultural imperialism. Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (30:4)

Lit., "before and after". The defeats and victories spoken of above relate to the last phases of the centuries-long struggle between the Byzantine and Persian Empires. During the early years of the seventh century the Persians conquered parts of Syria and Anatolia, "the lands close-by", i.e., near the heartland of the Byzantine empire; in 613 they took Damascus and in 614, Jerusalem; Egypt fell to them in 615-16, and at the same time they laid siege to Constantinople itself. At the time of the revelation of this surah - about the seventh year before the hijrah, corresponding to 615 or 616 of the Christian era - the total destruction of the Byzantine Empire seemed imminent. The few Muslims around the Prophet were despondent on hearing the news of the utter discomfiture of the Byzantines, who were Christians and, as such, believed in the One God. The pagan Quraysh, on the other hand, sympathized with the Persians who, they thought, would vindicate their own opposition to the One-God idea. When Muhammad enunciated the above Qur'an-verses predicting a Byzantine victory "within a few years", this prophecy was received with derision by the Quraysh. Now the term bid (commonly rendered as "a few") denotes any number between three and ten; and, as it happened, in 622 - i.e., six or seven years after the Quranic prediction - the tide turned in favour of the Byzantines. In that year, Emperor Heraclius succeeded in defeating the Persians at Issus, south of the Taurus Mountains, and subsequently drove them out of Asia Minor. By 624, he carried the war into Persian territory and thus put the enemy on the defensive: and in the beginning of December, 626, the Persian armies were completely routed by the Byzantines.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (30:5)

This is a prediction of the battle of Badr, which was to take place eight or nine years later, in the month of Ramadan, 2 H. (corresponding to January, 624, of the Christian era), when the Muslims decisively defeated a very much superior force of pagan Quraysh (see introductory note to surah 8). The expression "on that day" has in this context the meaning of "at the same time", for although the battle of Badr began and ended on one day, the victories of Heraclius over the Persians took some years to materialize.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (30:7)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (30:25)

Cf. 13:12, where God is spoken of as having "raised the skies without any supports that you could see" - a phrase explained in the corresponding note 4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (30:27)

Although this statement is phrased in almost exactly the same words as in verse 11 above (as well as in 10:4), it evidently has here a more general purport, relating not only to man and mans individual resurrection but to the creation and constant re-creation of all life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (30:27)

Primarily, the term mathal denotes a "likeness" or "similitude", and hence is often used in the Qur'an (e.g., in the next verse) in the sense of "parable". Occasionally, however, it is synonymous with sifah, which signifies the intrinsic "attribute", "quality" or "nature" of a thing, concept or living being (cf. the reference to "the nature of Jesus" and "the nature of Adam" in 3:59). With reference to God, who is sublimely exalted above anything that men may devise by way of definition (see 6:100 and the corresponding note 88), the expression mathal clearly points to a quality of being entirely different from all other categories of existence, inasmuch as there is "nothing like unto Him" (42:11) and "nothing that could be compared with Him" (112:4): hence, the rendering of mathal as "essence" is most appropriate in this context.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (30:28)

Lit., "a parable (mathal) from yourselves".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (30:28)

I.e., slaves or persons otherwise subject to ones authority.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (30:28)

Lit., "yourselves" - i.e., "those who are equal to you in status". The question is, of course, rhetorical, and must be answered in the negative. But if (so the implied argument goes) a human master would not willingly accept his slaves as full-fledged partners - even though master and slave are essentially equal by virtue of the humanness common to both of them (Zamakhshari) - how can man regard any created beings or things as equal to Him who is their absolute Lord and Master, and is beyond comparison with anything that exists or could ever exist? (Parables with a similar purport are found in 16:75-76.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (30:29)

In this instance, the phrase alladhina zalamu ("they who are bent on evil-doing") relates to those who deliberately ascribe divinity or divine powers to anyone or anything beside God, thus yielding to a desire for divine or semi-divine "mediators" between themselves and Him. Inasmuch as such a desire offends against the concept of God's omniscience and omnipresence, its very existence shows that the person concerned does not really believe in Him and, therefore, does not have the least knowledge of the truth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (30:29)

For an explanation of God's "letting man go astray", see note 4 on the second sentence of 14:4, as well as note 7 on 2:7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (30:30)

I.e., "surrender thy whole being"; the term "face" is often used metonymically in the sense of one's "whole being".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (30:30)

For this rendering of hanif, see note 110 on 2:135.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (30:30)

See 7:172 and the corresponding note 139. The term fitrah, rendered by me as "natural disposition", connotes in this context man's inborn, intuitive ability to discern between right and wrong, true and false, and, thus, to sense God's existence and oneness. Cf. the famous saying of the Prophet, quoted by Bukhari and Muslim: "Every child is born in this natural disposition; it is only his parents that later turn him into a 'Jew', a 'Christian', or a 'Magian'." These three religious formulations, best known to the contemporaries of the Prophet, are thus contrasted with the "natural disposition" which, by definition, consists in man's instinctive cognition of God and self-surrender (Islam) to Him. (The term "parents" has here the wider meaning of "social influences" or "environment").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (30:30)

Lit., "no change shall there be [or "shall be made"] in God's creation (khalq)". i.e., in the natural disposition referred to above (Zamakhshari). In this context, the term tabdil ("change") obviously comprises the concept of "corruption".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (30:32)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (30:35)

Lit., "a warrant" or "authority" (sultan), in this context obviously denoting a revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (30:35)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (30:38)

Cf. 17:26.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (30:39)

This is the earliest mention of the term and concept of riba in the chronology of Quranic revelation. In its general, linguistic sense, this term denotes an "addition" to or an "increase" of a thing over and above its original size or amount; in the terminology of the Qur'an, it signifies any unlawful addition, by way of interest, to a sum of money or goods lent by one person or body of persons to another. Considering the problem in terms of the economic conditions prevailing at or before their time, most of the early Muslim jurists identified this "unlawful addition" with profits obtained through any kind of interest-bearing loans irrespective of the rate of interest and the economic motivation involved. With all this - as is evidenced by the voluminous juridical literature on this subject - Islamic scholars have not yet been able to reach an absolute agreement on the definition of riba: a definition, that is, which would cover all conceivable legal situations and positively respond to all the exigencies of a variable economic environment. In the words of Ibn Kathir (in his commentary on 2:275), "the subject of riba is one of the most difficult subjects for many of the scholars (ahl al-ilm)". It should be borne in mind that the passage condemning and prohibiting riba in legal terms (2:275-281) was the last revelation received by the Prophet, who died a few days later (cf. note 268 on 2:281); hence, the Companions had no opportunity to ask him about the shar'i implications of the relevant injunction - so much so that even Umar ibn al-Khattab is reliably reported to have said: "The last [of the Qur'an] that was revealed was the passage [lit. "the verse"] on riba; and, behold, the Apostle of God passed away without [lit., "before"] having explained its meaning to us" (Ibn Hanbal, on the authority of Sa'id ibn al-Musayyab). Nevertheless, the severity with which the Qur'an condemns riba and those who practice it furnishes - especially when viewed against the background of mankind's economic experiences during the intervening centuries - a sufficiently clear indication of its nature and its social as well as moral implications. Roughly speaking, the opprobrium of riba (in the sense in which this term is used in the Qur'an and in many sayings of the Prophet) attaches to profits obtained through interest-bearing loans involving an exploitation of the economically weak by the strong and resourceful: an exploitation characterized by the fact that the lender, while retaining full ownership of the capital loaned and having no legal concern with the purpose for which it is to be used or with the manner of its use, remains contractually assured of gain irrespective of any losses which the borrower may suffer in consequence of this transaction. With this definition in mind, we realize that the question as to what kinds of financial transactions fall within the category of riba is, in the last resort, a moral one, closely connected with the socio-economic motivation underlying the mutual relationship of borrower and lender; and, stated in purely economic terms, it is a question as to how profits and risks may be equitably shared by both partners to a loan transaction. It is, of course, impossible to answer this double question in a rigid, once-for-all manner: our answers must necessarily vary in accordance with the changes to which man's social and technological development - and, thus, his economic environment - is subject. Hence, while the Quranic condemnation of the concept and practice of riba is unequivocal and final, every successive Muslim generation is faced with the challenge of giving new dimensions and a fresh economic meaning to this term which, for want of a better word, may be rendered as "usury". In the present instance (which, as I have mentioned, is the earliest in the history of the Qur'an), no clear-cut prohibition is as yet laid down; but the prohibition appearing in 2:275 ff. is already foreshadowed by the reference to the immoral hope of increasing one's own substance "through [other] people's possessions", i.e., through the exploitation of others.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (30:39)

Cf. 2:276.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (30:40)

Lit., "any of your [God-] partners". Cf. note 15 on 6:22.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (30:41)

The prefix li in li-yudhiqahum does not indicate here a purport or intent ("so that" or "in order that"), but is a lam al-aqibah, i.e., a prefix expressing a factual consequence (best rendered as "thereupon" or "and so").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (30:41)

Thus, the growing corruption and destruction of our natural environment, so awesomely - if as yet only partially - demonstrated in our time, is here predicted as "an outcome of what men's hands have wrought", i.e., of that self-destructive - because utterly materialistic - inventiveness and frenzied activity which now threatens mankind with previously unimaginable ecological disasters: an unbridled pollution of land, air and water through industrial and urban waste, a progressive poisoning of plant and marine life, all manner of genetic malformations in men's own bodies through an ever widening use of drugs and seemingly "beneficial" chemicals, and the gradual extinction of many animal species essential to human well-being. To all this may be added the rapid deterioration and decomposition of man's social life, the all-round increase in sexual perversion, crime and violence, with, perhaps, nuclear annihilation as the ultimate stage: all of which is, in the last resort, an outcome of man's oblivion of God and, hence, of all absolute moral values, and their supersession by the belief that material "progress" is the only thing that matters.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (30:42)

I.e., they worshipped material comfort and power, and thus lost sight of all spiritual values and, in the end, destroyed themselves.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (30:43)

As in verse 46 above, the reference to "the winds" has here a symbolic significance, namely, spiritual life and hope; hence my interpolation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (30:46)

The mention of God's messages, interpolated by me between brackets, is justified by the verses which precede and follow this passage. Moreover, it is only by means of such an interpolation that the symbolic purport of the above reference to "the winds that bear glad tidings" can be made fully obvious.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (30:47)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (30:51)

The particle la'in (lit., "indeed, if ") is often used in the Qur'an to express the recurrent, typical character of the attitude or situation referred to in the sequence; in all such cases it may be suitably rendered as "thus it is: if ", etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (30:51)

For a full explanation of this verse, see 11:9 and the corresponding notes 16-19.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (30:53)

Cf. the identical passage in 27:80-81 and the corresponding note 72.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (30:54)

In the original, this sentence is formulated in the past tense ("has created you" and "has ordained"), stressing the recurrent character of man's life-phases. In translation, this recurrence can be suitably expressed by using the present tense.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (30:55)

This interpolation - the meaning of which is elliptically implied here - shows the connection of the present passage with the preceding one, as well as with verses 11-16 and 27.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (30:55)

The illusory character of man's earthbound concept of "time" is brought out in the Qur'an in several places. In the above context stress is laid, firstly, on the relativity of this concept - i.e., on the infinitesimal shortness of our life on earth as compared with the timeless duration of life in the hereafter (cf., for instance, 10:45 or 17:52) - and, secondly, on the resurrected sinners' self-deluding excuse that their life on earth had been too short to allow them to realize their errors and mend their ways. It is to this second aspect of the problem that the Qur'an alludes in the words, "thus were they wont to delude themselves" (lit., "to be turned away", i.e., from the truth). For an explanation of the verb yu'fikun, see surah 5 note 90.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (30:56)

Evidently, in verse 55 ma labithu has the meaning of "they had not stayed" or "remained", while in verse 56 labithtum denotes "you have been tardy" or "you have waited".

The Monotheist Group	31:6 And from the people, there are those who accept baseless narrations to mislead from the path of God without knowledge, and they take it as entertainment. These will have a humiliating retribution.
Muhammad Asad	31:6 But among men there is many a one that prefers a mere play with words [to divine guidance], ⁴ so as to lead [those] without knowledge astray from the path of God, and to turn it to ridicule: for such there is shameful suffering in store.
Rashad Khalifa	31:6 Among the people, there are those who uphold baseless Hadith, and thus divert others from the path of GOD without knowledge, and take it in vain. These have incurred a shameful retribution.
Shabbir Ahmed	31:6 But among people, there are those who invest their time in Hadith which is unfounded, so as to lead those without knowledge away from the path of God, making mockery of it (the Qur'an). For such there is a humiliating punishment in store. ¹

Only two subjects cannot be known by people. Commentaries relying on hadith and sunna misinterpret this verse and claim that five subjects cannot be known by people. God's knowledge of something does not necessarily negate another person's knowledge. See 15:87; 20:15.

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (31:2)

See note 2 on 10:1.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (31:4)

The term az-zakah seems to have here its more general meaning of "charity" rather than the legal connotation of "purifying dues" (see note 34 on 2:43), the more so as the above passage has a close inner resemblance to 2:2-4, where "spending on others out of what We provide as sustenance" is described as one of the characteristics of the God-conscious.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (31:6)

Lit., "among the people there is he who [or "such as"] takes playful [or "idle"] talk in exchange", i.e., for divine guidance: apparently an allusion to a pseudo-philosophical play with words and metaphysical speculations without any real meaning behind them (cf. note 38 on 23:67). Contrary to what some of the commentators assume, the above statement does not refer to any one person (allegedly a contemporary of the Prophet) but describes a type of mentality and has, therefore, a general import.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (31:7)

Cf. 23:66-67.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (31:9)

Commenting on the above three verses, Razi points out, firstly, that the deliberate contrast between the plural in the promise of "gardens (jannat) of bliss" and the singular in that of "suffering" (adhab) is meant to show that God's grace surpasses His wrath (cf. note 10 on 6:12); and, secondly, that the use of the expression "to abide therein" in connection with the mention of paradise only, and not with that of otherworldly suffering (or hell), is an indication that whereas the enjoyment of the former will be unlimited in duration, suffering in what is described as "hell" will be limited.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (31:10)

See note 4 on 13:2.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (31:10)

See note 11 on 16:15.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (31:10)

This is another of the many Quranic instances where the personal pronoun relating to God is suddenly changed - in this instance, from "He" to "We" - in order to indicate that God, being infinite, cannot be circumscribed by any pronoun applicable to created, finite beings, and that the use of such pronouns with reference to Him is no more than a concession to the limited nature of every human language.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (31:10)

Lit., "thereon". As in 26:7, the term zawj has here the significance of "a kind".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (31:11)

Sc., "who ascribe divine powers to beings or things other than God".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (31:12)

Popularly (though without sufficient justification) identified with Aesop, Luqman is a legendary figure firmly established in ancient Arabian tradition as a prototype of the sage who disdains worldly honours or benefits and strives for inner perfection. Celebrated in a poem by Ziyad ibn Mu'awiyah (better known under his pen-name Nabighah adh-Dhubyani), who lived in the sixth century of the Christian era, the person of Luqman had become, long before the advent of Islam, a focal point of innumerable legends, stories and parables expressive of wisdom and spiritual maturity: and it is for this reason that the Qur'an uses this mythical figure - as it uses the equally mythical figure of Al-Khidr in surah 18 - as a vehicle for some of its admonitions bearing upon the manner in which man ought to behave.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (31:13)

Lit., "O my little son" - a diminutive idiomatically expressive of endearment irrespective of whether the son is a child or a grown man.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (31:14)

Lit., "his weaning is [or "takes place"] within two years". According to some philologists, the term fisal circumscribes the entire period of conception, gestation, birth and earliest infancy (Taj al-'Arus): in brief, the period of a child's utter dependence on its mother.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (31:14)

Thus, gratitude towards parents, who were instrumental in one's coming to life, is here stipulated as a concomitant to man's gratitude towards God, who is the ultimate cause and source of his existence (cf. 17:23-24).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (31:15)

Lit., "something of which thou hast no knowledge", i.e., "something which is contrary to thy knowledge that divine qualities are God's alone" (cf. 29:8).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (31:16)

For my rendering of latif as "unfathomable", see surah 6 note 89.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (31:20)

I.e., "has enabled you to derive benefit from all, etc. (Cf. note 46 on 14:32-33.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (31:20)

I.e., both visible and invisible benefits, as well as both physical and intellectual (or spiritual) endowments.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (31:21)

Regarding the implications of the term "Satan" in this context, see note 10 on 2:14 and note 16 on 15:17. As in many other places in the Qur'an, the above verse expresses an oblique condemnation of the principle and practice of taqlid (see Razi's observations quoted in note 38 on 26:74).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (31:22)

See note 91 on 2:112.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (31:25)

For the above rendering of la in, see surah 30 note 45.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (31:25)

I.e., they give the above answer unthinkingly, following a vague habit of thought, without realizing that a cognition of God as the Ultimate Cause of all existence logically postulates one's full surrender to Him, and to Him alone.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (31:27)

Lit., "after that".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (31:27)

Cf. a similar passage in 18:109.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (31:28)

I.e., in view of His almightiness, there is no difference between the creation and resurrection of many and of one, just as every single soul is as much within His ken as is all mankind.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (31:29)

See note 5 on 13:2.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (31:30)

See surah 20 note 99.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (31:32)

Cf. 17:67, as well as 29:65, which says - in a similar context - that "they (begin to) ascribe to imaginary powers a share in His divinity" (yushrikun). The parable of a storm at sea is, of course, a metonym applying to every kind of danger that may beset man in life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (31:33)

For instance, the self-deluding expectation, while deliberately committing a sin, that God will forgive it (Sa'id ibn Jubayr, as quoted by Tabari, Baghawi, Asas) According to Tabari, the term gharur denotes "anything that deludes" (ma gharra) a person in the moral sense, whether it be Satan, or another human being, or an abstract concept, or (as in 57:14) "wishful thinking".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (31:34)

This relates not merely to the problem of the sex of the as yet unborn embryo, but also to the question of whether it will be born at all, and if so, what its natural endowments and its character will be, as well as what role it will be able to play in life: and life itself is symbolized by the preceding mention of rain, and the end of all life in this world, by the mention of the Last Hour.

Shabbir Ahmed -

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 1 (31:6)

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 2 (31:13)

How will you feel if you take care of a child, give him the best education, and prepare him for life, only to see him thank someone else? Thus is idolatry; injustice.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 3 (31:34)

God reveals His knowledge whenever He wills. We learn from this verse that we may be able to predict the rain, and the gender of the fetus. But we can never know the time or place of death. In accordance with 72:27, God has revealed the end of the world through His Messenger of the Covenant. See 15:87, 20:15, and Appendix 25 for the details.

The Monotheist Group	32:3 Or do they say: "He fabricated it!" No, it is the truth from your Lord, so that you may warn a people who never received a warner before you, in order that they may be guided.
Muhammad Asad	32:3 and yet, ² they [who are bent on denying the truth] assert, [Muhammad] has invented it!" Nay, but it is the truth from thy Sustainer, enabling thee to warn [this] people to whom no warner has come before thee, so that they might follow the right path.
Rashad Khalifa	32:3 They said, "He fabricated it." Indeed, this is the truth from your Lord, to warn people who never received a warner before you, that they may be guided.
Shabbir Ahmed	32:3 And yet they assert, "He has invented it." Nay, it is but the truth from your Lord, for you to warn a people to whom no warner has come before you, so that they may be guided. ¹

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (32:1)

A1L30M40. This combination of letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. The function of these letters is stated in the following verse 32:2. See 74:1-56; 1:1; 2:1; 13:38; 27:82; 38:1- 8; 40:28-38; 46:10; 72:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (32:4)

For the evolutionary creation of the universe, See 41:9-10.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (32:12)

See 6:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (32:14)

It is interesting that the only exception for God's never forgetting nature is in connection with the people who deserved Hell. See 22:19-22

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (32:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (32:3)

Cf. note 61 on 10:38.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (32:4)

See note 43 on 7:54.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (32:5)

I.e., the Day of Judgment will seem to be endless to those who are judged. In the ancient Arabic idiom, a day that is trying or painful is described as "long", just as a happy day is spoken of as "short" (Maraghi XXI, 105).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (32:6)

See surah 6 note 65.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (32:7)

I.e., He fashions every detail of His creation in accordance with the functions intended for it, irrespective of whether those functions can be understood by us or are beyond the reach of our perception. In the text, the passage comprising verses 7-9 is in the past tense; but since it relates to a continuous act of creation, it signifies the present and the future as well as the past, and may, therefore, be suitably rendered in the present tense.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (32:7)

Cf. note 4 on 23:12. In view of the next verse, this "beginning" of man's creation seems to allude to the basic composition of the human body as such, as well as to each individual's pre-natal existence in the separate bodies of his parents.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (32:8)

Lit., "He caused [i.e., as pointed out in note 6 above, "He causes"] his procreation [or "his begetting"] to be out of", etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (32:9)

As in 15:29 and 38:72, God's "breathing of His spirit into man" is a metaphor for the divine gift of life and consciousness, or of a "soul" (which, as pointed out in surah 4 note 181, is one of the meanings of the term ruh). Consequently, "the soul of every human being is of the spirit of God" (Razi). Regarding the verb sawwahu - rendered by me as "He forms him in accordance with what he is meant to be" - see note 1 on 87:2 and note 5 on 91:7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (32:9)

Lit., "hearts" (af'idah), which in classical Arabic is a metonym for both "feelings" and "minds"; hence my composite rendering of this term.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (32:10)

Sc., "and thus, by implication, they deny His existence". (Cf. notes 11 and 12 on 13:5.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (32:13)

Lit., "We could indeed have given unto every human being (nafs) his guidance", i.e., forcibly: but since this would have deprived man of his ability to choose between right and wrong - and, thus, of all moral responsibility - God does not "impose" His guidance upon anyone (cf. 26:4 and the corresponding note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (32:13)

See 7:18 as well as the last paragraph of 11:119. As regards the "invisible beings" (jinn), see Appendix III.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (32:16)

Lit., "whose sides [i.e., bodies] restlessly rise".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (32:17)

Lit., "what is kept hidden for them [by way] of a joy of the eyes", i.e., of blissful delights, irrespective of whether seen, heard or felt. The expression "what is kept hidden for them" clearly alludes to the unknowable - and, therefore, only allegorically describable - quality of life in the hereafter. The impossibility of man's really "imagining" paradise has been summed up by the Prophet in the well-authenticated hadith: "God says: 'I have readied for My righteous servants what no eye has ever seen, and no ear has ever heard, and no heart of man has ever conceived'" (Bukhari and Muslim, on the authority of Abu Hurayrah; also Tirmidhi). This hadith has always been regarded by the Companions as the Prophet's own comment on the above verse (cf. Fath al-Bari VIII, 418 f.).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (32:21)

Lit., "nearer", i.e., in this world: for an explanation, see note 27 on 52:47.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (32:21)

Lit., "so that they might return (to righteousness)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (32:23)

With this passage the discourse returns to the theme enunciated at the beginning of this surah - namely, the divine origin of the revelation granted to Muhammad, which, as the present passage points out, proceeds from the same source as that granted to Moses (the last of the great apostles of God accepted as such by all the three monotheistic religions, Judaism, Christianity and Islam). Furthermore, the identity of the fundamental truths in all divine revelations, stressed in the above verse, implies an identity of the moral demands made of the followers of those revelations irrespective of period, race or social environment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (32:24)

I.e., in accordance with the divine ordinances enunciated in and for their time in the Torah: an allusion to the decline of faith, frequently mentioned in the Qur'an, among the children of Israel of later times, and the tendency among many of their leaders and learned men to corrupt the text of the Torah and, thus, to "overlay the truth with falsehood" (see, e.g., 2:42, 75, 79, and the corresponding notes).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (32:24)

This interpolation reflects Zamakhshari's commentary on the above passage, to the effect that the Qur'an is destined to provide guidance and light so long as the community's religious leaders are patient in adversity and steadfast in their faith: an interpretation which implies that the Qur'an will cease to be of benefit to people who have lost their moral virtues and their faith.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (32:25)

Lit., "between them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (32:25)

See surah 2 note 94; also 22:67-69. In the present instance, this difference of opinion relates to belief in resurrection, on the one hand, and its denial, on the other.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (32:26)

For the wider meaning of the term qarn (lit., "generation"), see note 111 on 20:128.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (32:28)

A reference to the statement in verse 25.

Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 1 (32:1)

The meaning of these letters is given in the next verse: ``This book is, without a doubt, a revelation from the Lord of the universe." See Appendix1 for the details.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 2 (32:12)

If sent back, they would commit the same transgressions. See Footnote 6:28.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 3 (32:13)

The majority of humans ``insist" upon going to Hell, by choosing to ignore God's invitations to redeem them. God will not put a single person in Hell. Those who fail to redeem themselves by denouncing idolatry and devoting themselves to God ALONE, and fail to develop their souls through the practices prescribed by our Creator, will have to run to Hell on their own volition. They will be too weak to stand the physical presence of God's energy.

Shabbir Ahmed -

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 1 (32:3)

Prophet Ishmael was the ancestor of, and not a prophet to, the Arabs who became a community long after he passed on. See note 2:125, 28:46, 36:6. And the message is to fan out from Arabia to all mankind 2:185, 3:3, 3:137, 6:19, 6:91, 10:2, 14:1, 25:1, 30:58, 39:41, 68:52

Edip-Layth	33:4 God did not make any man with two hearts in his body. Nor did He make your wives whom you estrange to be as your mothers. Nor did He make your adopted children to be your sons. Such is what you claim with your mouths, but God speaks the truth, and He guides to the path. ¹
The Monotheist Group	33:4 God did not make any man with two hearts in his body. Nor did He make your wives whom you make estranged to be as your mothers. Nor did He make your adopted children to be your sons. Such is what you claim with your mouths, but God speaks the truth, and He guides to the path.
Muhammad Asad	33:4 NEVER has God endowed any man with two hearts in one body: ² and [just as] He has never made your wives whom you may have declared to be as unlawful to you as your mothers' bodies" [truly] your mothers, ³ so, too, has He never made your adopted sons [truly] your sons: ⁴ these are but [figures of] speech uttered by your mouths - whereas God speaks the [absolute] truth: ⁵ and it is He alone who can show [you] the right path.
Rashad Khalifa	Devotion to God Is Indivisible 33:4 GOD did not give any man two hearts in his chest. Nor did He turn your wives whom you estrange (according to your custom) into your mothers. Nor did He turn your adopted children into genetic offspring. All these are mere utterances that you have invented. GOD speaks the truth, and He guides in the (right) path. ¹
Shabbir Ahmed	33:4 God did not give any man two hearts in his chest. (One cannot be a believer and a disbeliever at the same time.) And He never regards your wives as your mothers because of your senseless utterances, such as your declaring them as your mothers. Nor does He regard your adopted sons as your biological sons. These are mere words that you utter with your mouths, but God declares the truth and shows the way. ²

Edip-Layth	no sin upon you if you make a mistake in this respect; but you will be responsible for what your hearts deliberately intend. God is Forgiver, Compassionate.
The Monotheist Group	33:5 Name them by retaining their fathers names. That is more just with God. But if you do not know their fathers, then, name them as your brothers in the system and your patrons. There is no sin upon you if you make a mistake in this respect; but you will be responsible for what your hearts deliberately intend. God is Forgiver, Merciful.
Muhammad Asad	33:5 [As for your adopted children,] call them by their [real] fathers' names: this is more equitable in the sight of God; and if you know not who their fathers were, [call them] your brethren in faith and your friends. ⁶ However, you will incur no sin if you err in this respect: ⁷ [what really matters is] but what your hearts intend - for God is indeed much-forgiving, a dispenser of grace!
Rashad Khalifa	Do Not Change Your Names 33:5 You shall give your adopted children names that preserve their relationship to their genetic parents. This is more equitable in the sight of GOD. If you do not know their parents, then, as your brethren in religion, you shall treat them as members of your family. You do not commit a sin if you make a mistake in this respect; you are responsible for your purposeful intentions. GOD is Forgiver, Most Merciful.
Shabbir Ahmed	33:5 Name your adopted children after their fathers; that is more just in the sight of God. And if you do not know who their fathers were, then they are your brothers, sisters and friends in faith. You shall treat them as family members. There is no blame on you for an unintentional mistake. What counts is the intention of your hearts, for God is Forgiving, Merciful.

Edip-Layth	33:6 The prophet is closer to those who acknowledge than themselves, and his wives are mothers to them. God's decree to those who acknowledge and the emigrants is that before they help their relatives, they have taken care of their own families first. Such has been decreed in the book.
The Monotheist Group	33:6 The prophet is closer to the believers than themselves, and his wives are mothers to them. And God's decree to the believers and the emigrants is that before they help their relatives, they have taken care of their own families first. Such has been decreed in the Scripture.
Muhammad Asad	33:6 The Prophet has a higher claim on the believers than [they have on] their own selves, [seeing that he is as a father to them] and his wives are their mothers: ⁸ and they who are [thus] closely related have, in accordance with God's decree, a higher claim upon one another than [was even the case between] the believers [of Yathrib] and those who had migrated [there for the sake of God]. ⁹ None the less, you are to act with utmost goodness towards your [other] close friends as well: ¹⁰ this [too] is written down in God's decree.
Rashad Khalifa	33:6 The prophet is closer to the believers than they are to each other, and his wives are like mothers to them. The relatives ought to take care of one another in accordance with GOD's scripture. Thus, the believers shall take care of their relatives who immigrate to them, provided they have taken care of their own families first. These are commandments of this scripture.
Shabbir Ahmed	33:6 The prophet is closer to the believers than their own selves, and his wives are their mothers. Relatives have rights on one another in accordance with the Book of God. Thus, the believers shall take care of their relatives who immigrate to them, while they have taken care of their immediate family members first. And you shall treat your friends in all kindness. Such is the writing in this Book (of God). ³

Muhammad Asad	33:32 O wives of the Prophet! You are not like any of the [other] women, provided that you remain [truly] conscious of God. ³⁵ Hence, be not over-soft in your speech, lest any whose heart is diseased should be moved to desire [you]: but, withal, speak in a kindly way.
Rashad Khalifa	Setting the Example 33:32 O wives of the prophet, you are not the same as any other women, if you observe righteousness. (You have a greater responsibility.) Therefore, you shall not speak too softly, lest those with disease in their hearts may get the wrong ideas; you shall speak only righteousness.
Shabbir Ahmed	33:32 O Wives of the prophet! You are not like other women. If you wish to live upright, then, be not overly soft in speech, lest he in whose heart is a disease aspire (to you). But speak in customary kindness.

Edip-Layth	Muhammad Tested 33:37 You said to the one who was blessed by God, and blessed by you: "Keep your wife and reverence God," and you hid inside yourself what God wished to proclaim. You feared the people, while it was God you were supposed to fear. So when Zayd ended his relationship with his wife, We had you marry her, to establish that there is no wrongdoing for those who acknowledge marrying the wives of their adopted sons if their relationship is ended. God's command is always done.

The Monotheist Group	33:37 And you said to the one who was blessed by God, and blessed by you: "Keep your wife and reverence God," and you hid inside yourself what God wished to proclaim. And you feared the people, while it was God you were supposed to fear. So when Zayd ended his relationship with his wife, We had you marry her, to establish that there is no wrongdoing for the believers in marrying the wives of their adopted sons if their relationship is ended. And God's command is always done.
Muhammad Asad	33:37 AND LO, ⁴² [O Muhammad,] thou didst say unto the one to whom God had shown favour and to whom thou hadst shown favour, ⁴³ Hold on to thy wife, and remain conscious of God!" And [thus] wouldst thou hide within thyself something that God was about to bring to light ⁴⁴ for thou didst stand in awe of [what] people [might think], whereas it was God alone of whom thou shouldst have stood in awe! ⁴⁵ [But] then, when Zayd had come to the end of his union with her, ⁴⁶ We gave her to thee in marriage, so that [in future] no blame should attach to the be lievers for [marrying] the spouses of their adopted children when the latter have come to the end of their union with them. ⁴⁷ And [thus] God's will was done.
Rashad Khalifa	33:37 Recall that you said to the one who was blessed by GOD, and blessed by you, "Keep your wife and reverence GOD," and you hid inside yourself what GOD wished to proclaim. Thus, you feared the people, when you were supposed to fear only GOD. When Zeid was completely through with his wife, we had you marry her, in order to establish the precedent that a man may marry the divorced wife of his adopted son. GOD's commands shall be done.
Shabbir Ahmed	33:37 (In personal matters you may respectfully disagree with Muhammad in the capacity of a human being 3:79. As an example) Recall that you did tell the one to whom God had blessed and you had blessed, "Hold on to your wife and be mindful of God. You seek to conceal within yourself what God intends to reveal. You fear people whereas it is more appropriate to fear God." But when he had observed all the rules and divorced her, We gave her to one of you in marriage, so that henceforth there may be no blame on the believers in respect of spouses of their adopted children when they have come to the dissolution of their union. The commandment of God must be fulfilled. ¹⁴

Also lawful for you in marriage are the daughters of your father's brothers, the daughters of your father's sisters, the daughters of your mother's brothers, the daughters of your mother's sisters,

Rashad Khalifa	who have emigrated with you. Also, if a believing woman gave herself to the prophet - by forfeiting the dowry - the prophet may marry her without a dowry, if he so wishes. However, her forfeiting of the dowry applies only to the prophet, and not to the other believers. We have already decreed their rights in regard to their spouses or what they already have. This is to spare you any embarrassment. GOD is Forgiver, Most Merciful.
Shabbir Ahmed	33:50 O Prophet! We have made lawful to you your wives to whom you have given their due share of property, and those women who have sought asylum with you and signed the marital contract (6:10). Also lawful for you in marriage were daughters of your paternal uncles and aunts, and the daughters of your maternal uncles and aunts who had migrated with you. And lawful is a believing woman who wishes to marry the prophet, forfeiting her due share and the prophet is willing to marry her. This forfeiting of dowry applies to you only, and not to other believers. We have already decreed their rights regarding their wives and women who have sought asylum in their homes. This arrangement is designed to ease any social difficulties on you (as Head of the State). God is Absolver of imperfections, Merciful.

Edip-Layth	33:51 You may postpone whom you will of them, and you may receive whom you will. Whomsoever you seek of those whom you have set aside then there is no sin upon you. Such is best that they may be comforted and not grieve, and may all be pleased with what you give them. God knows what is in your hearts. God is Knowledgeable, Compassionate.

Such is best that they may be comforted and not grieve, and may all be pleased with what you give them. God knows what is in your hearts. God is Knowledgeable, Compassionate.
Muhammad Asad	33:51 [know that] thou mayest put off for a time whichever of them thou pleasest, and mayest take unto thee whichever thou pleasest; and [that,] if thou seek out any from whom thou hast kept away [for a time], thou wilt incur no sin [thereby]: ⁶² this will make it more likely that their eyes are gladdened [whenever they see thee], ⁶³ and that they do not grieve [whenever they are overlooked], and that all of them may find contentment in whatever thou hast to give them: for God [alone] knows what is in your hearts - and God is indeed all-knowing, forbearing. ⁶⁴
Rashad Khalifa	33:51 You may gently shun any one of them, and you may bring closer to you any one of them. If you reconcile with any one you had estranged, you commit no error. In this way, they will be pleased, will have no grief, and will be content with what you equitably offer to all of them. GOD knows what is in your hearts. GOD is Omniscient, Clement.
Shabbir Ahmed	33:51 You may let any of your wives leave amicably if they so wish, and likewise you may keep close those who accept the extra responsibilities as the mothers of believers. If you reconcile with anyone you had estranged, you commit no error. This will gladden their eyes, their grief will disappear and all of them will be content with whatever you give them. God alone knows what is in your hearts, and God is Knower, Clement. ²¹

You must be content with those already made lawful to you. GOD is watchful over all things.
Shabbir Ahmed	33:52 Henceforth, no other women shall be lawful to you (O Prophet!), nor can you substitute anyone with other wives even if you find them attractive. None beyond those you already have. Surely, God is Watchful over all things.

Edip-Layth	33:53 O you who acknowledge, do not enter the prophet's homes except if you are invited to a meal, without you forcing such an invitation. But if you are invited, you may enter. When you finish eating, you shall leave, without staying to wait for a hadith. This used to annoy the prophet, and he was shy to tell you. But God does not shy away from the truth. If you ask his wives for something, ask them from behind a barrier. This is purer for your hearts and their hearts. It is not for you to harm God's messenger, nor you should marry his wives after him. This is a gross offence with God.¹⁰
The Monotheist Group	33:53 O you who believe, do not enter the prophet's homes except if you are invited to a meal, without you forcing such an invitation. But if you are invited, you may enter. And when you finish eating, you shall leave, without staying to wait for news. This used to bother the prophet, and he was shy to tell you. But God does not shy away from the truth. And if you ask his wives for something, ask them from behind a barrier. This is purer for your hearts and their hearts. And it is not for you to harm God's messenger, nor that you should marry his wives after him. This is indeed a gross offence with God.
Muhammad Asad	33:53 O YOU who have attained to faith! Do not enter the Prophet's dwellings unless you are given leave; [and when invited] to a meal, do not come [so early as] to wait for it to be readied: but whenever you are invited, enter [at the proper time]; and when you have partaken of the meal, disperse without lingering for the sake of mere talk: that, behold, might give offence to the Prophet, and yet he might feel shy of [asking] you [to leave]: but God is not shy of [teaching you] what is right. ⁶⁸ And [as for the Prophet's wives,] whenever you ask them for anything that you need, ask them from behind a screen: ⁶⁹ this will but deepen the purity of your hearts and theirs. Moreover, it does not behove you to give offence to God's Apostle - just as it would not behove you ever to marry his widows after he has passed away: ⁷⁰ that, verily, would be an enormity in the sight of God.
	Etiquette 33:53 O you who believe, do not enter the prophet's homes unless you are given permission to eat, nor shall you force such an invitation in any manner. If you are invited,

Rashad Khalifa	you may enter. When you finish eating, you shall leave; do not engage him in lengthy conversations. This used to hurt the prophet, and he was too shy to tell you. But GOD does not shy away from the truth. If you have to ask his wives for something, ask them from behind a barrier. This is purer for your hearts and their hearts. You are not to hurt the messenger of GOD. You shall not marry his wives after him, for this would be a gross offense in the sight of GOD.
Shabbir Ahmed	33:53 O You who have chosen to be graced with belief! Do not enter the prophet's homes unless permission is given to you. When invited to dine, do not arrive too early waiting for preparation of the meal. When you are invited, come at the appointed time, and when you have taken your meal, disperse, without engaging him in lengthy conversation. This used to hurt the prophet, and he was shy to tell you. But God does not shy away from the truth. If you have to ask his wives for something, ask them from behind the curtain. This is purer for your hearts and for theirs. It is not for you to hurt the messenger of God. You shall not marry his wives after him. For, this would be a great offense in the sight of God. ²²

Muhammad Asad - End Note (33:2)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (33:4)

Lit., "within him". In the first instance, this connects with the preceding passage, implying that man cannot be truly conscious of God and at the same time defer to the views of "the deniers of the truth and the hypocrites" (Razi). Beyond this, however, the above sentence forms a conceptual link with the sequence, which states that it is against the God-willed laws of nature - and, therefore, unreasonable and morally inadmissible - to attribute to one and the same person two mutually incompatible roles within the framework of human relationships (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (33:4)

This is a reference to the pre-Islamic Arabian custom called zihar, whereby a husband could divorce his wife by simply declaring, "Thou art [henceforth as unlawful] to me as my mother's back", the term zahr ("back") being in this case a metonym for "body". In pagan Arab society, this mode of divorce was considered final and irrevocable; but a woman thus divorced was not allowed to remarry, and had to remain forever in her former husband's custody. As is evident from the first four verses of surah 58 (Al-Mujadalah) - which was revealed somewhat earlier than the present surah - this cruel pagan custom had already been abolished by the time of the revelation of the above verse, and is mentioned here only as an illustration of the subsequent dictum that the "figures of speech [lit., "your sayings"] which you utter with your mouths" do not necessarily coincide with the reality of human relations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (33:4)

I.e., in the sense of blood relationship: hence, the marriage restrictions applying to real sons - and, by obvious implication, daughters as well - do not apply to adoptive children. This statement has a definite bearing on verses 37 ff. below.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (33:4)

Sc., by bringing into being the factual, biological relationship of parent and child in distinction from all man-made, social relationships like husband and wife, or foster-parent and adoptive child. In this connection it should be borne in mind that the Qur'an frequently uses the metaphor of God's "speech" to express His creative activity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (33:5)

I.e., "make it clear that your relationship is an adoptive one, and do not create the impression that they are your real children" - thus safeguarding their true identity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (33:5)

I.e., by making a mistake in the attribution of the child's parentage, or by calling him or her, out of love, "my son" or "my daughter".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (33:6)

Thus, connecting with the preceding mention of voluntary, elective relationships (as contrasted with those by blood), this verse points to the highest manifestation of an elective, spiritual relationship: that of the God-inspired Prophet and the person who freely chooses to follow him. The Prophet himself is reported to have said: "None of you has real faith unless I am dearer unto him than his father, and his child, and all mankind" (Bukhari and Muslim, on the authority of Anas, with several almost identical versions in other compilations). The Companions invariably regarded the Prophet as the spiritual father of his community. Some of them - e.g., Ibn Mas'ud (as quoted by Zamakhshari) or Ubayy ibn Ka'b, Ibn Abbas and Mu'awiyah (as quoted by Ibn Kathir) - hardly ever recited the above verse without adding, by way of explanation, "seeing that he is [as] a father to them"; and many of the tabi'in including Mujahid, Qatadah, Ikrimah and Al-Hasan (cf. Tabari and Ibn Kathir) - did the same: hence my interpolation, between brackets, of this phrase. (However, see also verse 40 of this surah and the corresponding note 50.) As regards the status of the Prophet's wives as the "mothers of the believers", this arises primarily from the fact of their having shared the life of God's Apostle in its most intimate aspect. Consequently, they could not remarry after his death (see verse 53 below), since all the believers were, spiritually, their "children".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (33:6)

See note 86 on the last but one sentence of 8:75. As explained in that note, neither of these two passages (8:75 and) can be satisfactorily interpreted as bearing on the laws of inheritance: all endeavours to interpret them in that sense only do violence to the logical build-up and inner cohesion of the Quranic discourse. On the other hand, it is obvious that both passages have basically a similar (namely, spiritual) import - with the difference only that whereas the concluding sentences of Al-Anfal refer to the brotherhood of all believers in general, the present passage lays stress on the yet deeper, special relationship between every true believer and God's Apostle.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (33:6)

I.e., towards all other believers, as stressed so often in the Qur'an, and particularly in 8:75 (see preceding note): in other words, a believer's exalted love for the Prophet should not blind him to the fact that "all believers are brethren" (49:10). The extremely complex term ma'ruf rendered by me in this context as "innermost goodness", may be defined as "any act [or attitude] the goodness whereof is evident to reason" (Raghib).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (33:7)

This parenthetic passage connects with verses 1-3 above, and relates to every prophet's "pledge" - i.e., sacred duty - to convey God's message to man, and thus to act as "a bearer of glad tidings and a warner". (for my rendering of idh, in this context, as "lo", see surah 2, note 21).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (33:8)

Cf. 5:109 and, more particularly, 7:6 - "We shall most certainly call to account all those unto whom Our message was sent, and We shall most certainly call to account the message-bearers [themselves]"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (33:9)

Cf. 3:124-125 and the corresponding note. The present passage (verses 9-27) relates to the War of the Confederates (al -ahzab) - also called the War of the Trench (al -khandaq) - which took place in 5 H. AAt the instigation of the Jewish tribe of Banu'n-Nadir, who had been expelled from Yathrib (Medina) after they had broken the treaty binding them to the Muslims, several of the most powerful Arabian tribes formed a confederacy with a view to overcoming, once and for all, the threat posed by Islam to the beliefs and many of the customs of pagan Arabia. In the month of Shawwal, 5 H., a force of well over 12,000 men, composed of the Quraysh and their allies - the Banu Kinanah, Banu Asad and the people of the coastlands (the Tihamah), as well as the great Najdi tribe of Ghatafan and its allies, the Hawazin (or Banu Amir) and Banu Sulaym - converged upon Medina. Forewarned of their coming, the Prophet had ordered a deep trench to be dug around the town - a defensive measure unknown in pre-Islamic Arabia - and thus brought the assault of the Confederates to a halt. At that point, however, another danger arose for the Muslims: the Jewish tribe of Banu Qurayzah, who lived in the outskirts of Medina and until then had been allied with the Muslims, broke the treaty of alliance and openly joined the Confederates. Nevertheless, during a siege lasting several weeks all the attempts of the latter to cross the trench - manned by the numerically much weaker and less well-armed Muslims - were repulsed with heavy losses to the attackers; dissensions, based on mutual distrust, gradually undermined the much-vaunted alliance between the Jewish and the pagan Arab tribes; in the month of Dhu l-Qadah their frustration became complete when a bitterly-cold storm wind raged for several days, making life unbearable even for hardened warriors. And so, finally, the siege was raised and the Confederates dispersed, thus ending the last attempt of the pagans to destroy the Prophet and his community.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (33:10)

The Ghatafan group tried to take the trench by assault from the upper, eastern part of the Medina plain, while the Quraysh and their allies launched an attack from its lower, i.e., western part (Zamakhshari), and this obviously in consonance with their original lines of approach - the Ghatafan having come from the highlands (Najd), and the Quraysh from the coastal lowlands (the Tihamah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (33:10)

Lit., "[when] you thought all [manner of] thoughts about God": i.e., "whether He would save you or allow your enemies to triumph".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (33:12)

This phrase obviously denotes here the weak of faith among the believers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (33:12)

This is a reference to Muhammad's prophetic vision, at the time of digging the trench, of the future Muslim conquest of the whole Arabian Peninsula as well as of the Persian and Byzantine Empires (Tabari). Several authentic Traditions testify to the Prophet's announcement of this vision at the time in question.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (33:13)

I.e., outside the city, defending the trench.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (33:14)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (33:16)

Lit., "for then" or "in that case" (idhan), signifying here "however it may be".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (33:20)

Sc., "but would come back in force and resume the siege".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (33:20)

Lit., "they would not fight except a little".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (33:21)

[This verse (and the passage that follows) connects with verses 9-11 above, and especially with verse 11 - "there and then were the believers tried, and shaken with a shock severe" - which summarizes, as it were, their experiences during the critical days and weeks of the War of the Trench. Although it is addressed, in the first instance, to those early defenders of Medina who were thus exhorted to emulate the Prophet's faith, courage and steadfastness, the above verse is timeless in its import and its validity for all situations and conditions. Since the verb rajawa, as well as the noun-forms rajw, rujuww and raja derived from it, carry the connotation of both "hope" and "fear" (or "awe"), I have rendered yarju accordingly.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (33:22)

These seem to be allusions to 29:2 (which may have been one of the last Meccan revelations) as well as to 2:155 and 214 (i.e., verses of the first surah of the Medina period).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (33:23)

Specifically, this verse is said to apply to certain of the Companions who vowed, at the time of the early campaigns, that they would fight until death at the Prophet's side (Zamakhshari); in its wider sense, however, it relates to all efforts involving a supreme sacrifice in God's cause.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (33:24)

Cf. 6:12 "God, who has willed upon Himself the law of grace and mercy" - and the corresponding note 10.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (33:25)

I.e., the pagans among the Confederates (see note 13 on verse 9 above); their Jewish allies are mentioned separately in the next verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (33:26)

Lit., "them", i.e., the tribes allied against Muhammad and his community. The "followers of earlier revelation" (ahl al-kitab) referred to here were the Jews of the tribe of Banu Qurayzah, who despite their monotheistic faith had betrayed the Muslims and made common cause with the pagan Confederates. After the dismal rout of the latter, the Banu Qurayzah, anticipating the vengeance of the community which they had betrayed, withdrew to their fortresses in the vicinity of Medina. After a siege lasting twenty-five days they surrendered to the Muslims, forfeiting all that they possessed.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (33:27)

I.e., lands which the Muslims were to conquer and hold in the future. This clause - with its allusion to yet more prosperous times to come - provides a connection between the present passage and the next.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (33:28)

By the time this verse was revealed (see note 65 on verse 52 of this surah) the Muslims had conquered the rich agricultural region of Khaybar, and the community had grown more prosperous. But while life was becoming easier for most of its members, this ease was not reflected in the household of the Prophet who, as before, allowed himself and his family only the absolute minimum necessary for the most simple living. In view of the changed circumstances, it was no more than natural that his wives were longing for a share in the comparative luxuries which other Muslim women could now enjoy: but an acquiescence by Muhammad to their demand would have conflicted with the principle, observed by him throughout his life, that the standard of living of God's Apostle and his family should not be higher than that of the poorest of the believers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (33:29)

When, immediately after their revelation, the Prophet recited the above two verses to his wives, all of them emphatically rejected all thought of separation and declared that they had chosen "God and His Apostle and the [good of the] hereafter" (recorded in several compilations of ahadith, among them Bukhari and Muslim). Some of the earliest Islamic scholars (e.g., Qatadah and Al-Hasan, as quoted by Tabari) held that the subsequent revelation of verse 52 of this surah constituted God's reward, as it were, for this attitude.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (33:30)

Regarding this connotation of the term fahishah, see surah 4, note 14 on verse 16. According to Zamakhshari, in his commentary on the present verse, this term comprises all that may be described as a "gross sin" (kabirah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (33:31)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (33:33)

The term jahiliyyah denotes the period of a people's - or civilization's - moral ignorance between the obliteration of one prophetic teaching and the emergence of another; and, more specifically, the period of Arabian paganism before the advent of Muhammad. Apart from these historical connotations, however, the term describes the state of moral ignorance or unconsciousness in its general sense, irrespective of time or social environment. (See also note 71 on 5:50.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (33:37)

For this rendering of particle idh, see surah 2, note 21. With the next verse, the discourse returns to the problem of "elective" relationships touched upon in verses 4 ff. Several years before Muhammad's call to prophethood, his wife Khadijah made him a present of a young slave, Zayd ibn Harithah, a descendant of the North-Arabian tribe of Banu Kalb, who had been taken captive as a child in the course of one of the many tribal wars and then sold into slavery at Mecca. As soon as he became the boy's owner, Muhammad freed him, and shortly afterwards adopted him as his son; and Zayd, in his turn, was among the first to embrace Islam. Years later, impelled by the desire to break down the ancient Arabian prejudice against slaves or even a freedman's marrying a "free-born" woman, the Prophet persuaded Zayd to marry his (Muhammad's) own cousin, Zaynab bint Jahsh, who, without his being aware of it, had been in love with Muhammad ever since her childhood. Hence, she consented to the proposed marriage with great reluctance, and only in deference to the authority of the Prophet. Since Zayd, too, was not at all keen on this alliance (being already happily married to another freed slave, Umm Ayman, the mother of his son Usamah), it was not surprising that the marriage did not bring happiness to either Zaynab or Zayd. On several occasions the latter was about to divorce his new wife who, on her part, did not make any secret of her dislike of Zayd; and each time they were persuaded by the Prophet to persevere in patience and not to separate. In the end, however, the marriage proved untenable, and Zayd divorced Zaynab in the year 5 H. Shortly afterwards the Prophet married her in order to redeem what he considered to be his moral responsibility for her past unhappiness and to demonstrate that divorcee of ex-slave was worthy of being a wife of the prophet and thus one of the "mother of believers". This marriage was also meant to exemplify a point of canon law as described below.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (33:37)

I.e., Zayd ibn Harithah, whom God had caused to become one of the earliest believers, and whom the Prophet had adopted as his son.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (33:37)

Namely, that the marriage of Zayd and Zaynab, which had been sponsored by Muhammad himself, and on which he had so strongly insisted, was a total failure and could only end in divorce (see also next note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (33:37)

Lit., "whereas God was more worthy (ahaqq) that thou shouldst stand in awe of Him". Referring to this divine reprimand (which, in itself, disproves the allegation that the Qur'an was "composed by Muhammad"), Aishah is reliably quoted as having said, "Had the Apostle of God been inclined to suppress anything of what was revealed to him, he would surely have suppressed this verse" (Bukhari and Muslim).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (33:37)

Lit., "ended his want of [or "claim on"] her", sc., by divorcing her (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (33:37)

Thus, apart from the Prophet's desire to make amends for Zaynab's past unhappiness, the divine purpose in causing him to marry the former wife of his adopted son (stressed in the phrase, "We gave her to thee in marriage") was to show that - contrary to what the pagan Arabs believed - an adoptive relationship does not involve any of the marriage-restrictions which result from actual, biological parent-and-child relations (cf. note 3 on verse 4 of this surah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (33:38)

I.e., his marriage with Zaynab, which was meant to exemplify a point of canon law as well as to satisfy what the Prophet regarded as his personal moral duty.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (33:38)

I.e., the prophets who preceded Muhammad, in all of whom, as in him, all personal desires coincided with their willingness to surrender themselves to God: an inborn, harmonious disposition of the spirit which characterizes God's elect and - as the subsequent, parenthetical clause declares - is their "destiny absolute" (qadar maqdur).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (33:40)

I.e., he is the spiritual "father" of the whole community (cf. note 8 on verse 6 of this surah), and not of any one person or particular persons - thus, incidentally, refuting the erroneous idea that physical descent from a prophet confers, by itself, any merit on the persons concerned.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (33:40)

I.e., the last of the prophets, just as a seal (khatam) marks the end of a document; apart from this, the term khatam is also synonymous with khitam, the "end" or "conclusion" of a thing: from which it follows that the message revealed through Muhammad - the Qur'an - must be regarded as the culmination and the end of all prophetic revelation (cf. note on the first sentence of the second paragraph of 5:48, and note 126 on 7:158). See also note 102 on 21:107.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (33:42)

Lit., "at morn and evening", i.e., at all times.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (33:46)

I.e., at His behest (Tabari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (33:48)

Or: "yet [withal,] abstain from injuring them" (Zamakhshari - depending on whether adha hum is taken to mean "the hurt caused by them" or "done to them").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (33:49)

Lit., "you have no waiting-period whatever upon them which you should count" - i.e., "which either of you should take into account as an obligation": cf. the first part of 2:228, and the corresponding note 215. Since the question of pregnancy does not arise if the marriage has not been consummated, a waiting-period on the part of the divorced wife would be meaningless and of no benefit either to her or to her former husband.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (33:49)

This injunction, relating to certain marital problems which affect the believers in general, forms an introduction, as it were, to resumption, in the next verse, of the discourse on the marital laws applying exclusively to the Prophet: thus, it connects with the passage beginning with the words, "O wives of the Prophet! You are not like any of the [other] women" (verse 32), as well as with the subsequent reference to his marriage with Zaynab (verses 37 f.).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (33:50)

The term ajr is in this context synonymous with faridah in its specific sense of "dower" (mahr): see surah 2 note 224.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (33:50)

As pointed out in several places (see, in particular, note 32 on 4:25), Islam does not countenance any form of concubinage, and categorically prohibits sexual relations between a man and a woman unless they are lawfully married to one another. In this respect, the only difference between a "free" woman and a slave is that whereas the former must receive a dower from her husband, no such obligation is imposed on a man who marries his rightfully owned slave (lit., "one whom his right hand possesses") - that is, a woman taken captive in a "holy war" (jihad) waged in defense of the Faith or of liberty (note 167 on 2:190 and note 72 on 8:67) - : for, in such a case, the freedom conferred upon the bride by the very act of marriage is considered to be equivalent to a dower.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (33:50)

This was - in addition to his not being allowed to divorce any of his wives (see verse 52 below) - a further restriction imposed on the Prophet in the matter of marriage: whereas all other Muslims are free to marry any of their paternal or maternal cousins, the Prophet was allowed to marry only such from among them as had proved their strong, early attachment to Islam by having accompanied him on his exodus (the hijrah) from Mecca to Medina. In the opinion of Baghawi - an opinion obviously based on the corresponding, ancient Arabian usage - the term "daughters of thy paternal uncles and aunts" comprises in this context not only the actual paternal cousins but, in general, all women of the tribe of Quraysh, to which Muhammad's father belonged, while the term "daughters of thy maternal uncles and aunts" comprises all women of his mother's tribe, the Banu Zuhrah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (33:50)

The relevant clause reads, literally, "if she offered herself as a gift (in wahabat nafsaha) to the Prophet". Most of the classical commentators take this to mean "without demanding or expecting a dower (mahr)", which, as far as ordinary Muslims are concerned, is an essential item in a marriage agreement (cf. 4:4 and 24, and the corresponding notes; also surah 2 note 224.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (33:50)

The above parenthetical sentence refers to the previously revealed, general laws relating to marriage (see 2:221, 4:3-4 and 19-25, as well as the corresponding notes), and particularly the laws bearing on the question of dower.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (33:51)

Thus, the Prophet was told that he need not observe a strict "rotation" in the conjugal attentions due to his wives, although he himself, impelled by an inborn sense of fairness, always endeavoured to give them a feeling of absolute equality.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (33:51)

I.e., by the inner certainty that whenever he turned to any of them, he did so on impulse, out of genuine affection, and not out of a sense of marital "obligation".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (33:51)

According to a hadith on the authority of A'ishah, recorded in the Musnad of Ibn Hanbal, the Prophet "used to divide his attentions equitably among his wives, and then would pray: 'O God! I am doing whatever is in my power: do not, then, blame me for [failing in] something which is in Thy power [alone], and not in mine!' - thus alluding to his heart, and to loving some [of his wives] more than others."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (33:52)

Some commentators (e.g., Tabari) assume that this restriction relates to the four categories of women enumerated in verse 50 above: it is, however, much more probable that it is a prohibition barring the Prophet from marrying any woman in addition to those to whom he was already married (Baghawi, Zamakhshari). Some of the earliest, most outstanding authorities on the Qur'an, like Ibn Abbas, Mujahid, Ad-Dahhak, Qatadah, Ibn Zayd (all of them cited by Ibn Kathir), or Al-Hasan al-Basri (quoted by Tabari in his commentary on verses 28-29), link this prohibition of further marriages with the choice between the charms of worldly life and the good of the hereafter with which the wives of the Prophet were confronted on the strength of verses 28-29, and their emphatic option for "God and His Apostle" (cf. note 32 above). All those early authorities describe the revelation of verse 52 and the assurance which it was meant to convey to the wives of the Prophet - as God's reward, in this world, of their faith and fidelity. Since it is inconceivable that the Prophet could have disregarded the categorical injunction, "No [other] women shall henceforth be lawful to thee", the passage in question cannot have been revealed earlier than the year 7 H., that is, the year in which the conquest of Khaybar and the Prophet's marriage with Safiyyah - his last marriage - took place. Consequently, verses 28-29 (with which, as we have seen, verse 52 is closely connected) must have been revealed at that later period, and not, as some commentators think, in the year 5 H. (i.e., at the time of the Prophet's marriage with Zaynab).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (33:52)

I.e., to divorce any of them with a view to taking another wife in her stead (with the prohibitive accent on the "supplanting"- i.e., divorcing - of any of his wives).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (33:52)

In my opinion, the expression ma malakat yaminuka (lit., "what thy right hand possesses", or has come to possess") has here the same meaning as in 4:24, namely, "those whom thou hast come to possess through wedlock" (see surah 4 note 26); thus, the above verse is to be understood as limiting the Prophet's marriages to those already contracted.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (33:53)

Connecting with the reference, in verses 45-48, to the Prophet's mission, the above passage is meant to stress his unique position among his contemporaries; but as is so often the case with Quranic references to historical events and situations, the ethical principle enunciated here is not restricted to a particular time or environment. By exhorting the Prophet's Companions to revere his person, the Qur'an reminds all believers, at all times, of his exalted status (cf. note 85 on 2:104); beyond that, it teaches them certain rules of behaviour bearing on the life of the community as such: rules which, however insignificant they may appear at first glance, are of psychological value in a society that is to be governed by a genuine feeling of brotherhood, mutual consideration, and respect for the sanctity of each other's personality and privacy.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (33:53)

The term hijab denotes anything that intervenes between two things, or conceals, shelters or protects the one from the other; it may be rendered, according to the context, as "barrier", "obstacle", "partition", "screen", "curtain", "veil", etc., in both the concrete and abstract connotations of these words. The prohibition to approach the Prophet's wives otherwise than "from behind a screen" or "curtain" may be taken literally - as indeed it was taken by most of the Companions of the Prophet - or metaphorically, indicating the exceptional reverence due to these "mothers of the faithful".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (33:53)

Lit., "to marry his wives after him."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (33:55)

I.e., the wives of the Prophet (connecting with the injunction, in verse 53 above, that they should be spoken to "from behind a screen").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (33:55)

This interpolation is conditioned by the feminine gender of the subsequent plural imperative ittaqina.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (33:57)

In classical Arabic, the term la'nah is more or less synonymous with ib'ad ("removal into distance" or "banishment"); hence. God's la'nah denotes "His rejection of a sinner from all that is good" (Lisan al-Arab) or "exclusion from His grace" (Manar II, 50). The term mal'un which occurs in verse 61 below signifies, therefore, "one who is bereft of God's grace".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (33:59)

Cf. the first two sentences of 24:31 and the corresponding notes 37 and 38.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (33:59)

The specific, time-bound formulation of the above verse (evident in the reference to the wives and daughters of the Prophet), as well as the deliberate vagueness of the recommendation that women "should draw upon themselves some of their outer garments min jalabibihinna" when in public, makes it clear that this verse was not meant to be an injunction (hukm) in the general, timeless sense of this term but, rather, a moral guideline to be observed against the ever-changing background of time and social environment. This finding is reinforced by the concluding reference to God's forgiveness and grace.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 76 (33:60)

For my above rendering of la'in see surah 30 note 45. With this passage, the discourse returns to the theme touched upon in verse 1 and more fully dealt with in verses 9-27 namely, the opposition with which the Prophet and his followers were faced in their early years at Yathrib (which by that time had come to be known as Madinat an-Nabi, "the City of the Prophet").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (33:60)

see note 16 above.

I.e., "there will be open warfare between thee and them", which will result in their expulsion from Medina: a prediction which was fulfilled in the course of time.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 80 (33:61)

Lit., "slain with [a great] slaying". See in this connection note 168 on 2:191. For my rendering of mal'unin as "bereft of God's grace", see note 73 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 81 (33:62)

Cf. 35:42-44, and particularly the last paragraph of verse 43.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 82 (33:63)

See 7:187.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 83 (33:66)

As in several other instances in the Qur'an, the "face", being the noblest and most expressive part of a human person, represents here man's "personality" in its entirety; and its being "tossed about in the fire" is symbolic of the annihilation of the sinner's will and his reduction to utter passivity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 84 (33:68)

Lit., "reject them (il'anhum) with a great rejection", i.e., "from Thy grace".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 85 (33:69)

This is an allusion to the aspersions occasionally cast upon Moses by some of his followers and mentioned in the Old Testament (e.g., Numbers xii, 1-13), as well as to the blasphemous demands of which the Qur'an speaks - e.g., "O Moses, indeed we shall not believe thee until we see God face to face" (2:55) or, "Go forth, thou and thy Sustainer, and fight, both of you!" (5:24). These instances are paralleled here with the frequently cited accusations that Muhammad had "invented" the Qur'an and then falsely attributed it to God, that he was a madman, and so forth, as well as with frivolous demands to prove his prophethood by bringing about miracles or - as is re-stated in verse 63 of this surah - by predicting the date of the Last Hour.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 86 (33:70)

The expression qawl sadid signifies, literally, "a saying that hits the mark", i.e., is truthful, relevant and to the point. In the only other instance where this expression is used in the Qur'an (at the end of 4:9) it may be appropriately rendered as "speaking in a just manner"; in the present instance, however, it obviously relates to speaking of others in a manner devoid of all hidden meanings, insinuations and frivolous suspicions, aiming at no more and no less than the truth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 87 (33:72)

The classical commentators give all kinds of laborious explanations to the term amanah ("trust") occurring in this parable, but the most convincing of them (mentioned in Lane I, 102, with reference to the above verse) are "reason", or "intellect", and "the faculty of volition" - i.e., the ability to choose between two or more possible courses of action or modes of behaviour, and thus between good and evil.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 88 (33:72)

Sc., "and then failed to measure up to the moral responsibility arising from the reason and the comparative free will with which he has been endowed" (Zamakhshari. This obviously applies to the human race as such and not necessarily to all of its individuals.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 89 (33:73)

In other words, on those who offend against what their own reason and conscience would have them do. This suffering, whether in this world or in the hereafter, is but a causal consequence - as the lam al-aqibah at the beginning of this sentence shows - of man's moral failure, and not an arbitrary act of God. (Cf. in this connection note 7 on 2:7. which speaks of God's "sealing" the hearts of those who are bent on denying the truth.)

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (33:4)

Reflecting on the context of this verse, which reminds us that reality does not change just because people say something, we can deduce that during the time of revelation some people believed that they had two hearts. The Quran rejects these superstitions. From the implication of the verse we may understand the following too: Heart is a word used for the center of acknowledging the truth, and love. Hearts should be dedicated to the beautiful attributes of God alone. God is the only Lord and Master.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (33:7)

See 3:81.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (33:12)

In Sunni literature, the view of infallible or saint-like companions of Prophet Muhammad is predominant. Sunni literature tries to establish a taboo on discussing or criticizing any companion (sahaba, plural ahab) whose names are listed in the so-called authentic books as narrators. In a hadith falsely attributed to Muhammad, his companions are likened to stars and following any of them would be sufficient for guidance. The Quran, however, gives us a very different picture of Muhammad's companions. The Quran uses the word sahaba and its plural ahab for all companions of Muhammad, including his opponents, hypocrites, and muslims (34:46; 53:2; 81:22). The Quran informs us about the existence of hypocrites among Muhammad's companions; nevertheless, their names are not exposed to the public. The reason for not exposing the name of the hypocrites is God's will to implement the test freely on earth. As it is the case in most religious matters, Sunnis prefer fabricated hadiths to the Quran. In Sunni teaching there is a hierarchy of righteousness, starting from the stars of the sky to the next generation and the next generation. Through this myth, they craftily established ancestor-worship, one of the versions of polytheism categorically rejected by the Quran. Shiites, on the other hand, have a stricter rule for creating idol stars from dead people. They require Muhammad's or Ali's genes as a pre-requisite for sainthood. Idolizing early generations was a natural consequence of their theology: the authority of hadiths solely relies on the credibility and superiority of sahaba, and subsequent generations (tabeen, etba tabeen...), whose names have been sanctified in the lists of narrators of hearsay. They found it imperative to create a blanket protection for all companions, since allowing one to be scrutinized or questioned would create a slippery slope that would ultimately expose the human nature of the superhuman, ideal, angelic characters. Nevertheless, numerous works by Sunni scholars have challenged the mainstream position. Even if their history books point at some of those "holy men" killing other "holy men," the Sunnis claim that all will go to heaven; both the murderers and the victims. Sunni sources refuse even to condemn Muawiya and his governor Marwan who committed many atrocities. Though they express their grievances for the brutal murdering of Hassan and Hussain, prophet Muhammad's grandchildren, Sunnis again, refuse to criticize, let alone condemn the murderers, who happened to be Muhammad's companions when he was alive, or the companions of his companions! Sahaba-worship is one of the main teachings of Sunni sects. Shiites, on the other hand, condemn anyone who somehow participated in the conflict against anyone related to Muhammad through Ali and Fatima's lineage. Shiites, rather than using the universal criteria of justice and truth, use genes as their compass to hell or heaven. They worship only those ahab (plural of sahaba) who either supported Muhammad's son in-law Ali or his children. In brief, the historical animosity between Sunnis and Shiites originates from the differences in the list of their idols. All other differences are secondary, and can be found plentiful among their own subjects.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (33:13)

Yathrib was the name of the city that Muhammad and his supporters immigrated to and there they established a constitutional federal system accommodating a multi-religious and multi-racial diverse population. But now we cannot find the name of Yathrib on the map. The followers of hadith and sunna changed the name of the city after Muhammad just as they changed many other things. Since hadith is the product of later generations who started calling Yathrib with the word Medina (City), Muslims abandoned the original name, the name that is mentioned in the Quran and was used by Muhammad and his companions. This is one of the many evidences that prove our assertion that "Muslims" have deserted the Quran and are following hearsay as their guide (25:30).

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (33:21)

Those who idolized Muhammad have taken the verse out of its context and have abused it to justify volumes of stories presented as Muhammad's actions (sunna). The verse refers to Muhammad's bravery and constant remembrance of God during the war. The Quran refers to some other good leadership qualities of Muhammad (3:121, 159; 9:40) as well as some of his weaknesses (33:37; 80:1-16). Those who deserted the Quran (25:30), instead of following the progressive teaching of the Quran, extended this good example to irrelevant individual or cultural behavior. They introduced numerous rules to be mimicked, such as Muhammad's clothing, diet, toothbrush, beard, walk, sleep, and even urination. They sanctified growing beards and wearing turbans, ignoring the fact that the Meccan idol worshipers, such as Abu Jahl and Walid b. Mugiyra also had long beards and wore turbans. They adopted a whole concoction of medieval Arabic, Jewish and Byzantine cultures as God's religion. They regressed to monkeys like previous generations (2:65; 5:60; 7:166). What is worse, the actions and words ascribed to prophet Muhammad have depicted him with a character that is far from exemplary. The Hadith books portray the prophet as a phantasmagoric character with multiple personalities. That character is more fictitious than mythological gods and goddesses, such as Hermes, Pan, Poseidon and Aphrodite. He is a pendulous character, both bouncing up to deity, and down to the lowest degree. He is both wise and a moron. He is sometimes more merciful than God and sometimes a cruel torturer. He is both perfect and criminal, humble and arrogant, chaste and a sex maniac, trustworthy and a cheater, illiterate and an educator, rich and poor, a nepotistic and a democratic leader, caring and a male chauvinist, a believer and a disbeliever, prohibiting Hadith and promoting Hadith. You can find numerous conflicting personalities presented as an exemplary figure. Choose whichever you like. This peculiar aspect of Hadith collection is well-described by the prophetic verses of the Quran (68:35-38). Furthermore, a similar statement is made about Abraham: "A good example has been set for you by Abraham and those with him" (60:4, 6). If verse 33:21 requires Muhammad's hadith, then why would the verses 60:4,6 not also require Abraham's hadith? Which books narrate hadiths from Abraham? Obviously, the only reliable source for both examples is the Book of God, which narrates the relevant exemplary actions. It also warns us not to repeat the mistakes committed by Muhammad (33:37; 80: 1- 10). See 3:18; 3:159; 60:4. 42:21.

Edip-Layth - End Note (33:22)

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (33:32)

Prophet Muhammad was one of the most successful political and military leaders in history. His revolutionary leadership in theology, philosophy, culture, economy and politics, put him on top of the list of a prominent Western historian, Michael Hart, in the "History's 100 Most Influential People." Muhammad received a great opposition from the oligarchy of the Meccan theocracy. He had also some opposition in his own city-state. Besides violent campaigns to eliminate him and his supporters, he would occasionally become the target of defamation campaigns. Many conspired to embarrass and defame him through his wives. Indeed, this verse distinguishes Muhammad's wives from other Muslim women. Muhammad's wives were asked to be more careful not to provide ammunition for the negative propaganda of regressive forces who wished to stop the progressive movement that started with the light of the Quran.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (33:33)

One of the verbs in this verse can be understood in two ways, depending on the inclusion or exclusion of the letter W. Traditional commentators read it "wa QaRna" (and they should settle), derived from the root QRR, meaning to settle, sit down, etc. They translate the phrase as "sit in your homes." This translation followed by generalization of the instruction has been used as one of the reasons for why Muslim women should be confined in her homes. We prefer reading it as WaQaRna, which comes from the root WQR, which means acting in an honorable, kind, and dignified manner. (See 48:9; 71:13). Our reading would not be accurate if the verb was spelled, QaRaRna, from the root QRR. (See 7:143; 14:26,29; 22:5; 23:13; 27:61; 38:60; 40:39,64). It is evident that Muhammad's wives had their separate income and wealth.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (33:38)

When the Quran uses the word hadith (word; saying; narration) for something other than itself, it usually uses it in negative way or context (7:185; 12:111; 31:6; 33:53; 45:6; 52:34; 66:3; 77:50). Since God knew that that Sunni and Shiite mushriks would create other authorities besides God in their religion and call them hadith and sunna of prophet Muhammad, the Quran uses the word sunna (law) too always with a negative meaning with the exception of those used in conjunction with God, as in "God's sunna" (33:38,62; 35:43; 40:85; 48:23). There is only one valid sunna (law, way) and it is God's sunna. Those who follow Muhammad's sunna or, more accurately, a man-made sunna falsely attributed to him, will be convicted to the sunna mentioned in 35:43. The singular word sunna is never used for other than God to denote a positive path; but its plural, sunan, is used once in a positive sense in connection to previous generations (4:26). More interesting, the third fabricated religious authority or idol is called ijma (consensus) and whenever this word or its derivatives are used in the Quran for other than God, they are always negative (20:60; 70:18; 104:2; 3:173; 3:157; 10:58; 43:32; 26:38; 12:15; 10:71; 20:64; 17:88; 22:73; 54:45; 28:78; 7:48; 26:39; 26:56; 54:44). The same is true for the fourth word sharia (law) (42:21). The same is true for the word salaf (43:56) and for the word ashab (53:2). Are all of these a coincidence? Since the followers of hadith and sunna do not translate these words, to expose the nature of their teachings we preferred not to translate some of those words too. This would not only expose their evil scheme, but would also highlight one of the prophetic features of the Quran. Faced with these prophetic Quranic challenges, later Sunni and Shiite scholars tried to hijack one of the attributes of the Quran, hikma (wisdom) or hakim (wise), for their hadiths; but they failed. The abundance of nonsense in hadith books did not accept or deserve such a description; they could not raise penguins in the middle of desert. See 6:112-116; 17:39; 36:1; 39:18; 66:3. Also, see 49:1.

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (33:52)

Those who traded the progressive precepts of the Quran with the misogynistic culture of the medieval Pagan, Jewish and Christian communities covered women from head to toe while stripping them of their identities. Why do these people not reflect on this verse and acknowledge it? The verse refers to physical attraction. What is it? Is it subjective or is there a universal or measurable factor in our perception of beauty? Beauty, specifically facial attractiveness, has been a subject attracting the curiosity of philosophers and scientists. The issue received a scientific explanation with the computerized studies in the 1990s. In one of those studies, the scientists took the pictures of 96 college students and made their computer-generated composites by mathematically averaging their pixels in key points. They later asked 300 judges to rate them on a 5-point scale, 1 being very unattractive and 5 being very attractive. The composite faces consisting of higher component faces received the highest scores. In other words, our brain considers the average face of the population in which we live as the most attractive. There are interesting genetic, social and cognitive implications of this study. See 12:31; 30:21.

Edip-Layth - End Note 10 (33:53)

See 66:3; 33:38, and 33:32. Verse 4:22 prohibits marrying the ex-wives of fathers. To keep the privacy of Muhammad's personal life and prevent a possible competition among would-be candidates, the prophet's wives were legally considered to be the mothers of those who acknowledge (33:6).

Edip-Layth - End Note 11 (33:56)

This verse is one of the most distorted and abused verses. We translated the word salli ala as "support/encourage." The same word occurs at 33:43 and 9:99,133. When these verses are studied comparatively, the traditional abuse and distortion becomes evident. Through this distortion, Muslim masses are led to commemorate and praise Muhammad's name day and night, rather than his Lord's and Master's name (33:41-42). Also, see 2:157.

Edip-Layth - End Note 12 (33:62)

The only valid sunna is God's sunna. See 33:38.

Edip-Layth - End Note 13 (33:63)

We may learn some of the things that God knows. See 20:15.

Edip-Layth - End Note 14 (33:72)

See 3:83; 13:15; 41:11.

Edip-Layth - End Note 15 (33:73)

The fabricators of hadith stating that Muhammad's followers would split into 73 factions (ahzab) were most likely inspired by the number of verses in this chapter, which is traditionally named Factions. Since that hadith, the number of sects, cults, and orders is in the thousands. See: 6:153-159; 30:32; 98:4; 21:92; 23:52; 2:285.

Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 1 (33:4)

It was a custom in Arabia to estrange the wife by declaring that she was like the husband's mother. Such an unfair practice is abrogated herein.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 2 (33:7)

The covenant is detailed in 3:81. God took a covenant from the prophets that they shall support His Messenger of the Covenant who would come after Muhammad to purify and unify their messages. The Covenant was made before the earth's creation, and was fulfilled in Mecca Zul-Hijja 3, 1391 (December 21, 1971). The sum of the Islamic month (12), plus the day (3), plus the year (1391) gives 1406, 19x74. Overwhelming proof identifying God's Messenger of the Covenant as Rashad Khalifa is provided throughout the Quran (Appendices 2 & 26).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note (33:7)

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 3 (33:21)

Satan took this verse out of context, and relied on the people's idolization of the prophet Muhammad to innovate a whole set of unauthorized and unreasonable regulations called ``Sunna of the Prophet." This created a totally different religion (see 42:21 and Appendix 18).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 4 (33:40)

Despite this clear definition of Muhammad, most Muslims insist that he was the last prophet and also the last messenger. This is a tragic human trait as we see in 40:34. Those who readily believe God realize that God sent His purifying and consolidating Messenger of the Covenant after the final prophet Muhammad (3:81, 33:7).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 7 (33:56)

The word ``prophet" (Nabi) consistently refers to Muhammad only when he was alive. Satan used this verse to entice the Muslims into commemorating Muhammad, constantly, instead of commemorating God as enjoined in 33:41-42.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 8 (33:63)

Less than a century ago, only God possessed knowledge about television and space satellites, for example. He revealed this knowledge at the predetermined time. Similarly, God has revealed the time appointed for the end of this world (Appendix 25).

Edip-Layth	In the name of God, the Gracious, the Compassionate. 34:1 Praise be to God, to whom belongs everything in the heavens and the earth; and to Him is the praise in the Hereafter. He is the Wise, the Ever-aware.
The Monotheist Group	In the name of God, the Almighty, the Merciful. 34:1 Praise be to God, to whom belongs everything in the heavens and the Earth; and to Him is the praise in the Hereafter. He is the Wise, the Expert.
Muhammad Asad	In the name of God, The Most Gracious, The Dispenser of Grace: 34:1 ALL PRAISE is due to God, to whom all that is in the heavens and all that is on earth belongs; and to Him will be due all praise in the life to come. For He alone is truly wise, all-aware:
Rashad Khalifa	In the name of GOD, Most Gracious, Most Merciful. 34:1 Praise be to GOD - to whom belongs everything in the heavens and the earth; all praise is also due to Him in the Hereafter. He is the Most Wise, the Cognizant.
Shabbir Ahmed	BISMILLAH-IR-RAHMAN-IR-RAHEEM With the Glorious Name of God, the Ultimate Source of Instant Beneficence and Eternal mercy Who encompasses the entire Universe, nourishing and taking care of all things for what they are meant to be; just as a mother's womb nourishes the embryo to completion without any returns. 34:1 All praise is due to God to Whom belongs all that is in the heavens and all that is on earth. The entire Universe manifests His praise in its design, action, discipline and splendor. And for Him is the praise in the Hereafter, and He is Wise, Aware.

The Monotheist Group	34:3 And those who rejected said: "The Hour will not come upon us!" Say: "Yes, by my Lord, it will come to you." He is the Knower of the unseen, not even an atom's weight or less than that or greater can be hidden from Him, be it in the heavens or the Earth. All are in a clear record.
Muhammad Asad	34:3 And yet, they who are bent on denying the truth assert, Never will the Last Hour come upon us!" ² Say: Nay, by my Sustainer! By Him who knows all that is beyond the reach of a created being's perception: it will most certainly come upon you!" Not an atom's weight [of whatever there is] in the heavens or on earth escapes His knowledge; and neither is there anything smaller than that, or larger, but is recorded in [His] clear decree,
Rashad Khalifa	34:3 Those who disbelieve have said, "The Hour will never come to pass!" Say, "Absolutely - by my Lord - it will most certainly come to you. He is the Knower of the future. Not even the equivalent of an atom's weight is hidden from Him, be it in the heavens or the earth. Not even smaller than that, or larger (is hidden). All are in a profound record."
Shabbir Ahmed	34:3 And yet the disbelievers say, "Never will the Hour come upon us." Say, "Nay, by my Lord, it is coming to you. By the Knower of the Unseen, it will most certainly come upon you. (The Great Revolution in this world and the Hour of Resurrection are bound to come.) The Monotheist Group	34:16 But they turned away, so We sent them a destructive flash flood, and We substituted their two gardens into two gardens of rotten fruits, thorny plants, and a skimpy harvest.
Muhammad Asad	34:16 But they turned away [from Us], and so We let loose upon them a flood that overwhelmed the dams, ²⁴ and changed their two [expanses of luxuriant] gardens into a couple of gardens yielding bitter fruit, and tamarisks, and some few [wild] lote-trees:
Rashad Khalifa	34:16 They turned away and, consequently, we poured upon them a disastrous flood, and we substituted their two gardens into two gardens of bad tasting fruits, thorny plants, and a skimpy harvest.

Shabbir Ahmed	34:16 But they turned away from Permanent Values and We sent on them the Flood of the Aarim released from water dams. And We turned their Gardens into 'gardens' producing wild bitter fruit, and a thorny Lotetree here and there. ⁶

Muhammad Asad	34:17 thus We requited them for their having denied the truth. But do We ever requite [thus] any but the utterly ingrate? ²⁵
Rashad Khalifa	34:17 We thus requited them for their disbelief. Do we not requite only the disbelievers?

The Monotheist Group	34:18 And We placed between them and between the towns that We blessed, towns that were easy to see; and We measured the journey between them: "Travel in them by night and day in complete security."
Muhammad Asad	34:18 Now [before their downfall,] We had placed between them and the cities which We had blessed ²⁶ [many] towns within sight of one another; and thus We had made traveling easy [for them, as if to say]: Travel safely in this [land], by night or by day!"
Rashad Khalifa	34:18 We placed between them and the communities that we blessed other oases, and we secured the journey between them: "Travel therein days and nights in complete security."
Shabbir Ahmed	34:18 And We had set, between them and the towns We had blessed (Syria-Palestine), many oases with townships within sight of one another, and thus We had made traveling easy, "Travel safely in this land by night or by day." ⁸

The Monotheist Group	34:19 But they said: "Our Lord, make the measure between our journeys longer," and they wronged themselves. So We made them a thing of the past, and We scattered them into small groups. In this are signs for every person who is patient, thankful.
Muhammad Asad	34:19 But now they would say, Long has our Sustainer made the distance between our journey- stages!" - for they had sinned against themselves. ²⁷ And in the end We caused them to become [one of those] tales [of things long past], and scattered them in countless fragments. ²⁸ Herein, behold, there are messages indeed for all who are wholly patient in adversity and deeply grateful [to God].
Rashad Khalifa	34:19 But they (turned unappreciative and) challenged: "Our Lord, we do not care if You increase the distance of our journeys (without any stations)." They thus wronged their own souls. Consequently, we made them history, and scattered them into small communities throughout the land. This should provide lessons for those who are steadfast, appreciative.
Shabbir Ahmed	34:19 But now they would say, "Our Lord has made our journey-stages very distant." They wronged people and thus harmed themselves. Consequently, We made them, their formidable empire, history, dispersing them in fragments (as diasporas). Herein are signs for individuals and communities who would patiently draw lessons from history and be grateful (for what they learn). ⁹

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (34:2)

This definition comprises things physical and spiritual: waters disappearing underground and reappearing; the metamorphosis of seed into plant, and of decaying plant into oil and coal; traces of old artifacts and entire civilizations buried in the earth and then reappearing within the sight and consciousness of later generations of men; the transformation of dead bodies of animals and men into elements of nourishment for new life; the ascent of earthy vapours towards the skies, and their descent as rain, snow or hail; the ascent towards the heavens of men's longings, hopes and ambitions, and the descent of divine inspiration into the minds of men, and thus a revival of faith and thought and, with it, the growth of new artifacts, new skills and new hopes: in short, the endless recurrence of birth, death and re-birth which characterizes all of God's creation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (34:3)

This assertion of the godless has a twofold meaning: (1) "The universe is without beginning and without end: it can only change, but can never cease to exist" - which amounts to a denial of the fact that God alone is eternal; and (2) "There is no resurrection and divine judgment as symbolized by the Last Hour" - which amounts to a denial of life after death and, hence, of all significance and purpose attaching to human life as such.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (34:4)

See note 5 on 8:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (34:5)

The particle mim (lit., "out of") which precedes the noun rijz ("vileness" or "vile conduct") indicates that the suffering which awaits such sinners in the life to come is an organic consequence of their deliberately evil conduct in this world.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (34:8)

Lit., "remote aberration". (For the Quranic use of the term dalal - lit., "error" or "going astray" - in the sense of "aberration", see 12:8 and 12:95.) The construction of this phrase points definitely to suffering in this world (in contrast with the suffering in the hereafter spoken of in verse 5 above): for whereas the concept of "aberration" is meaningless in the context of the life to come, it has an obvious meaning in the context of the moral and social confusion - and, hence, of the individual and social suffering - which is the unavoidable consequence of people's loss of belief in the existence of absolute moral values and, thus, in an ultimate divine judgment on the basis of those values.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (34:9)

Lit., "... not aware of what of the sky and the earth is between their hands, and what is behind them": an idiomatic phrase explained in surah 2 note 247. In the present context - as well as in 2:255 - the above phrase stresses the insignificance of the knowledge attained to by man, or accessible to him; hence, so the argument goes, how can anyone be so presumptuous as to deny the reality of resurrection and life after death, seeing that it is a phenomenon beyond man's experience, while, on the other hand, everything within the universe points to God's unlimited creative power?

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (34:9)

I.e., in an earthquake.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (34:9)

This allusion to unpredictable geological and cosmic occurrences - earthquakes, the fall of meteors and meteorites, cosmic rays, and so forth - reinforces the statement about "how little of the sky and the earth lies open before them, and how much is hidden from them", and contrasts man's insignificance with God's omniscience and almightiness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (34:9)

See last sentence of 24:31 and the corresponding note 41.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (34:10)

Lit., "did We bestow upon David a favour from Ourselves". This connects with the elliptic reference to repentance in the preceding verse: David is singled out for special mention in view of the allusion, in surah 38, to his having suddenly become aware that he had committed a sin, whereupon "he asked his Sustainer to forgive him his sin and turned unto Him in repentance" (38:24).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (34:10)

Cf. 21:79 and the corresponding note 73.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (34:10)

Lit., "for him". The term hadid denotes, primarily, something that is "sharp" in both the concrete and abstract senses of the word: for the latter sense, cf. the Quranic phrase "sharp (hadid) is thy sight today" (50:22), or the many idiomatic expressions like rajul hadid, "a man of sharp intellect", hadid an-nazar, "one who looks boldly [at others]", ra'ihah hadidah, "a sharp odour", etc. (Lisan al-Arab). As a noun with a definite article (al-hadid), it signifies "all that is sharp", or "sharpness", as well as "iron". God's having "softened all sharpness" in David is evidently an allusion to his exalted sense of beauty (expressed in the poetry of his Psalms) as well as to his goodness and humility. An alternative rendering of the above phrase would be: "We caused iron to become soft for him", which might be an allusion to his outstanding abilities as poet, warrior and ruler.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (34:11)

The adjective sabigh (fem. sabighah) signifies anything that is "ample", "abundant" and "complete" (in the sense of being perfect). In its plural form sabighat it assumes the function of the noun which it is meant to qualify, and denotes, literally, "things [or "deeds"] ample and complete" or "perfect" - i.e., good deeds done abundantly and without stint: cf. the only other Quranic instance of the same stem in 31:20 - "[God] has lavished (asbagha) upon you His blessings". The noun sard, on the other hand, denotes something "carried on consecutively", or something the parts (or stages) whereof are "following one another steadily". i.e., are continued or repeated.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (34:12)

Cf. 21:81 and the corresponding note 75. For a more general explanation of the legends connected with the person of Solomon, see note 77 on 21:82.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (34:12)

Lit., "for him": probably a reference to the many furnishings of copper and brass which, according to the Bible (cf. II Chronicles iv), Solomon caused to be made for his newly-built temple.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (34:12)

Lit., "between his hands", i.e., subject to his will: see 21:82 and the corresponding notes 76 and 77. For my rendering of jinn as "invisible beings", see Appendix III.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (34:13)

I.e., because of their enormous size. Cf. II Chronicles iii, 10-13, where statues ("images") of cherubim are mentioned, as well as iv, 2-5, describing "a molten sea" (i.e., basin) of huge dimensions, resting upon twelve statues of oxen, and meant to contain water "for the priests to wash in" (ibid., iv, 6). The "sanctuaries" were apparently the various halls of the new temple.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (34:13)

These words, ostensibly addressed to "the people" or "the family" of David, are in reality an admonition to all believers, at all times, since all of them are, spiritually, "David's people".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (34:13)

I.e., even among those who consider themselves God's servants - for "truly grateful [to God] is only he who realizes his inability to render adequate thanks to Him" (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (34:14)

This is yet another of the many Solomonic legends which had become an inalienable part of ancient Arabian tradition, and which the Qur'an uses as a vehicle for the allegorical illustration of some of its teachings. According to the legend alluded to above, Solomon died on his throne leaning forward on his staff, and for a length of time nobody became aware of his death: with the result that the jinn, who had been constrained to work for him, went on labouring at the heavy tasks assigned to them. Gradually, however, a termite ate away Solomon's staff, and his body, deprived of support, fell to the ground. This story - only hinted at in its outline - is apparently used here as an allegory of the insignificance and inherent brittleness of human life and of the perishable nature and emptiness of all worldly might and glory.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (34:14)

Al-ghayb, "that which is beyond the reach of [a created being's] perception", either in an absolute or - as in this instance - in a relative, temporary sense.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (34:14)

I.e., because they would have known that Solomon's sway over them had ended. In the elliptic manner so characteristic of the Qur'an, stress is laid here, firstly, on the limited nature of all empirical knowledge, including the result of deductions and inferences based on no more than observable or calculable phenomena, and, secondly, on the impossibility to determine correctly, on the basis of such limited fragments of knowledge alone, what course of action would be right in a given situation. Although the story as such relates to "invisible beings", its moral lesson (which may be summed up in the statement that empirical knowledge cannot provide any ethical guideline unless it is accompanied, and completed, by divine guidance) is obviously addressed to human beings as well.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (34:15)

This connects with the call to gratitude towards God in the preceding passage, and the mention, at the end of verse 13, that "few are the truly grateful" even among those who think of themselves as "God's servants". (see note 19 above). The kingdom of Sheba (Saba in Arabic) was situated in south-western Arabia, and at the time of its greatest prosperity (i.e., in the first millennium B.C.) comprised not only the Yemen but also a large part of Hadramawt and the Mahrah country, and probably also much of present-day Abyssinia. In the vicinity of its capital Marib - the Sabaeans had built in the course of centuries an extraordinary system of dams, dykes and sluices, which became famous in history, with astonishing remnants extant to this day. It was to this great dam that the whole country of Sheba owed its outstanding prosperity, which became proverbial throughout Arabia. (According to the geographer Al-Ham dani, who died in 334 H., the area irrigated by this system of dams stretched eastward to the desert of Sayhad on the confines of the Rub al-Khali). The flourishing state of the country was reflected in its people's intense trading activities and their control of the "spice road" which led from Ma'rib northwards to Mecca, Yathrib and Syria, and eastwards to Dufar on the shores of the Arabian Sea, thus connecting with the maritime routes from India and China. The period to which the above Quranic passage refers is evidently much later than that spoken of in 27:22-44.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (34:16)

Lit., "the flooding of the dams" (sayl al-arim). The date of that catastrophe cannot be established with any certainty, but the most probable period of the first bursting of the Dam of Ma'rib seems to have been the second century of the Christian era. The kingdom of Sheba was largely devastated, and this led to the migration of many southern (Qahtan) tribes towards the north of the Peninsula.

Subsequently, it appears, the system of dams and dykes was to some extent repaired, but the country never regained its earlier prosperity; and a few decades before the advent of Islam the great dam collapsed completely and finally.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (34:17)

Neither the Qur'an nor any authentic hadith tells us anything definite about the way in which the people of Sheba had sinned at the time immediately preceding the final collapse of the Dam of Ma'rib (i.e., in the sixth century of the Christian era). This omission, however, seems to be deliberate. In view of the fact that the story of Sheba's prosperity and subsequent catastrophic downfall had become a byword in ancient Arabia, it is most probable that its mention in the Qur'an has a purely moral purport similar to that of the immediately preceding legend of Solomon's death, inasmuch as both these legends, in their Quranic presentation, are allegories of the ephemeral nature of all human might and achievement. As mentioned at the beginning of note 23 above, the story of Sheba's downfall is closely linked with the phenomenon of men's recurrent ingratitude towards God. (See also verse 20 and corresponding note 29 .)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (34:18)

I.e., Mecca and Jerusalem, both of which lay on the caravan route much used by the people of Sheba.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (34:19)

In its generally-accepted spelling - based on the reading adopted by most of the early scholars of Medina and Kufah - the above phrase reads in the vocative rabbana and the imperative ba'id ("Our Sustainer! Make long the distances", etc.), which, however, cannot be convincingly explained. On the other hand, Tabari, Baghawi and Zamakhshari mention, on the authority of some of the earliest Qur'an-commentators, another legitimate reading of the relevant words, namely, rabbuna (in the nominative) and ba'ada (in the indicative), which gives the meaning adopted by me: "Long has our Sustainer made the distances", etc. To my mind, this reading is much more appropriate since (as pointed out by Zamakhshari) it expresses the belated regrets and the sorrow of the people of Sheba at the devastation of their country, the exodus of large groups of the population, and the resultant abandonment of many towns and villages on the great caravan routes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (34:19)

An allusion to the mass-migration of South-Arabian tribes in all directions - particularly towards central and northern Arabia - subsequent to the destruction of the Dam of Ma'rib.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (34:20)

See 17:62, as well as the last sentence of 7:17, in which Iblis (i.e., Satan) says of the human race, "most of them wilt Thou find ungrateful".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (34:21)

Cf. a similar phrase placed in the mouth of Iblis in 14:22 ("I had no power at all over you: I but called you - and you responded unto me"), and the corresponding note 31; also, see note 30 on 15:39-40. Although, on the face of it, verses 20-21 of the present surah refer to the people of Sheba, their import is (as the sequence shows) much wider, applying to the human race as such.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (34:21)

See 15:41 and the corresponding note 31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (34:22)

I.e., anybody who would "mediate" between Him and any of His creatures. As is evident from the sequence (as well as from 17:56-57), this passage relates, in particular, to the attribution of divine or semi-divine qualities to saints and angels and to the problem of their "intercession" with God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (34:23)

Regarding the Qur'anic concept of "intercrssion", See note 7 on 10:31. Cf. also 19:87 and 20:109.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (34:23)

Lit., "the truth" - i.e., whatever God decides regarding His grant or refusal of leave for intercession (which is synonymous with His redemptive acceptance or His rejection of the human being concerned) will conform with the requirements of absolute truth and justice (see note 74 on 19:87).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (34:24)

See note 49 on the first sentence of 10:31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (34:29)

The Quranic answer to this ironic question is found in 7:187.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (34:30)

For my rendering of sa'ah (lit., "hour") as "a single moment", see surah 7 note 26.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (34:31)

For the rendering of ma bayna yadayhi, in relation to the Qur'an, as "whatever there still remains of earlier revelations", see surah 3 note 3. As is evident from the preceding and subsequent verses, the rejection by "those who are bent on denying the truth" of all revelation is motivated by their refusal to believe in resurrection and God's judgment, and, hence, to admit the validity of absolute moral standards as postulated by every higher religion.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (34:31)

I.e., as the "intellectual leaders" of their community.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (34:32)

Lit., "did we keep you away from guidance after it had come to you?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (34:33)

I.e., always, the term makr (lit., "a scheme" or "scheming") has here the connotation of "devising false arguments" against something that is true: in this case, as is shown in the first paragraph of verse 31 above, against God's messages (cf. a similar use of this term in 10:21 and 35:43; see also 86:15).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (34:33)

Lit., "[that we should] give God compeers (andad)". For an explanation of this phrase and my rendering of it, see surah 2 note 13.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (34:33)

For a justification of this rendering of the phrase asarru 'n-nadamah, see surah 10 note 77.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (34:33)

As pointed out by several of the classical commentators (e.g., Zamakhshari, Razi and Baydawi) in their explanations of similar phrases occurring in 13:5 and 36:8, the "shackles" (aghlal) which these sinners carry, as it were, "around their necks" in life, and will carry on Judgment Day, are a metaphor of the enslavement of their souls to the false values to which they had surrendered, and of the suffering which will be caused by that surrender.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (34:34)

The term mutraf denotes "one who indulges in the pursuit of pleasures", i.e., to the exclusion of all moral considerations: cf. note 147 on 11:116.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (34:35)

Implying, firstly, that the only thing that really counts in life is the enjoyment of material benefits; and, secondly, that a materially successful life is, by itself, an evidence of one's being "on the right way".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (34:36)

Sc., "and foolishly regard riches and poverty as indications of God's favour or disfavour". Indirectly, this statement refutes the belief held by many people in the present as well as in the past that material prosperity is a justification of all human endeavour.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (34:39)

I.e., God's promise to the righteous that they would attain to happiness in the life to come neither precludes nor implies their being wealthy or poor in this world.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (34:39)

I.e., either with worldly goods, or with inner contentment, or with spiritual merit (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (34:40)

This allegorical "question" - allegorical, because God is omniscient and has no need to "ask" - implies that many of "those who deny the truth" of God's messages delude themselves into believing that they are, nevertheless, worshipping spiritual forces, here comprised in the term "angels".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (34:41)

Implying that they (the angels) would never have accepted that worship which is due to God alone.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (34:41)

In this instance, I believe, the term jinn has its primary meaning of "that which is concealed from [man's] senses" (see Appendix III), thus including all manner of unknown forces, both real and imaginary, believed to be inherent in what we describe as "nature". Hence, the answer of the angels implies that the sinners' alleged worship of them had never been more than a subconscious screen for their fear of the invisible forces of nature and, ultimately, of the yet deeper fear of the Unknown - that fear which sooner or later engulfs all who refuse to believe in the existence of God and, hence, cannot see any meaning or purpose in human life. (See also the last sentence of 10:28 and the corresponding note 46.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (34:43)

Lit., "sorcery" or "magic" - a term frequently used in the sense of "spellbinding eloquence" (cf. 74: 24, the earliest instance in the chronology of Quranic revelation).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (34:44)

Lit., "which they could study", i.e., in support of the blasphemous beliefs and practices inherited from their ancestors. Cf. 30:35, which expresses a similar idea.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (34:45)

Sc., "And how much worse will fare the deniers of the truth to whom so explicit and so comprehensive a divine writ as the Qur'an has been conveyed!" My rendering of the whole of this verse is based on Razi's interpretation, which differs from that of most of the other commentators.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (34:46)

Lit., "two by two (mathna) and singly (furada)". According to Razi, the expression mathna denotes, in this context, "together with another person" or "other persons": hence, the above phrase may be understood to refer to man's social behaviour - i.e., his actions concerning others - as well as to his inner, personal attitude in all situations requiring a moral choice.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (34:46)

See note 150 on 7:184.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (34:47)

I.e., no reward of a material nature: cf. 25:57 - "no reward other than that he who so wills may unto his Sustainer find a way".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (34:48)

Cf. 21:18.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (34:49)

Cf. 17:81.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (34:49)

I.e., in contrast to the creativeness inherent in every true idea, falsehood - being in itself an illusion - cannot really create anything or revive any values that may have been alive in the past.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (34:50)

According to Zamakhshari, the idea expressed by the interpolated words "due to my own self" is implied in the above, inasmuch as "everything that goes against [the spiritual interests of] oneself is caused by oneself". (See note 4 on 14:4.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (34:51)

Lit., "from a place nearby" - i.e., from within their own selves: cf. 17:13 ("every human being's destiny have We tied to his neck") and the corresponding note 17. The same idea is expressed in 13:5 ("it is they who carry the shackles [of their own making] around their necks"), as well as in the second part of verse 33 of the present surah ("We shall have put shackles around the necks of those who had been bent on denying the truth"). See also 50:41 and the corresponding note 33.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (34:52)

Lit., "from a place far-away" - i.e., from their utterly different past life on earth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (34:53)

The obvious implication is that man's fate in the hereafter will be a consequence of, and invariably conditioned by, his spiritual attitude and the manner of his life during the first, earthly stage of his existence. In this instance, the expression "from far away" is apparently used in a sense similar to sayings like "far off the mark" or "without rhyme or reason", and is meant to qualify as groundless and futile all negative speculations about what the Qur'an describes as al-ghayb ("that which is beyond the reach of human [or "a created being's"] perception"): in this case, life after death.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (34:54)

Thus, the impossibility of attaining to the fulfillment of any of their desires - whether positive or negative - sums up, as it were, the suffering of the damned in the life to come.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (34:54)

I.e., a suspicion that all moral postulates were but meant to deprive them of what they considered to be the "legitimate advantages" of life in this world.

Solomon, besides being a leader, was also an art enthusiast. It is ironic to see that those who worship the black stone in Mecca, or turn the tombs of dead people into shrines, or hope for the intercession of the dead prophets and saints, those who commit polytheism in a myriad of ways, have such an opposition to statues made for artistic purposes.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (34:19)

Following the teaching of Satan is the equivalent of serving him. Even if someone claims to serve God, if he is following other teachings for salvation, he is serving Satan. The only way for protecting oneself is to dedicate one's purpose in life to God alone (15:39-42). Those who hope for the intercession of prophets, saints, and angels, and consider them to be partners with God in issuing the system, in fact do not serve them. Service requires mutual acceptance. Considering someone who rejects any other lord besides God to be one's lord is a contradiction and pleases Satan. In the hereafter, righteous people who were idolized against their will, will reject those who "worship them." (19:82; 46:6).

The Monotheist Group	35:8 The one whose evil work is adorned and he sees it as being good. God thus misguides whom he wills, and He guides whom He wills. So do not let yourself grieve over them. God is fully aware of what they are doing.

For, verily, God lets go astray him that wills [to go astray], just as He guides him that wills [to be guided]. ⁶ Hence, [O believer,] do not waste thyself in sorrowing over them: verily, God has full knowledge of all that they do!
Rashad Khalifa	35:8 Note the one whose evil work is adorned in his eyes, until he thinks that it is righteous. GOD thus sends astray whoever wills (to go astray), and He guides whoever wills (to be guided). Therefore, do not grieve over them. GOD is fully aware of everything they do.
Shabbir Ahmed	35:8 Can you think of him whose persistence in evil (blunts his sensitivity) so that he looks upon it as good? Surely, God lets go astray only him who wills to go astray, just as He guides him who wills to be guided. Therefore, do not waste yourself in sorrowing over them. Surely, God is Aware of all they contrive. ⁴

Muhammad Asad	35:9 AND [remember:] it is God who sends forth the winds, so that they raise a cloud, whereupon We drive it towards dead land and thereby give life to the earth after it had been lifeless: even thus shall resurrection be!
Rashad Khalifa	35:9 GOD is the One who sends the winds to stir up clouds, then we drive them towards barren lands, and revive such lands after they were dead. Thus is the resurrection.
Shabbir Ahmed	35:9 And God is the One Who sends the winds and they raise a cloud; then We lead it to a dead land and revive the earth after it had been lifeless. Thus is the Resurrection (and revival of individuals and communities with Divine guidance is an appropriate similitude).

Muhammad Asad	God [alone]. Unto Him ascend all good words, and the righteous deed does He exalt. But as for those who cunningly devise evil deeds - suffering severe awaits them; and all their devising is bound to come to nought. ⁷
Rashad Khalifa	All Dignity Belongs With God 35:10 Anyone seeking dignity should know that to GOD belongs all dignity. To Him ascends the good words, and He exalts the righteous works. As for those who scheme evil works, they incur severe retribution; the scheming of such people is destined to fail.
Shabbir Ahmed	35:10 Whoever desires dignity should know that to God belongs all Dignity and He is the Source of all dignity. Muhammad Asad	35:11 And [remember:] God creates [every one of] you out of dust, ⁸ then out of a drop of sperm; and then He fashions you into either of the two sexes. ⁹ And no female conceives or gives birth unless it be with His knowledge; and none that is long-lived has his days lengthened - and neither is aught lessened of his days - unless it be thus laid down in [God's] decree: for, behold, all this is easy for God.
Rashad Khalifa	God is in Full Control 35:11 GOD created you from dust, then from a tiny drop, then He causes you to reproduce through your spouses. No female becomes pregnant, nor gives birth, without His knowledge. No one survives for a long life, and no one's life is snapped short, except in accordance with a pre-existing record. This is easy for GOD.
Shabbir Ahmed	35:11 (Recall your common humble origin.) God created you from dust, then from male and female gametes, and then He makes you pairs. And no female becomes pregnant, nor gives birth without His knowledge (according to His appointed laws in nature, without exceptions). No one lives long, and no one lives short, but by His laws. You will only be able to warn those who fear their Lord while unseen, and they uphold the communion. And whoever contributes, is contributing for himself. And to God is the final destiny.
Muhammad Asad	35:18 AND NO BEARER of burdens shall be made to bear another's burden; ¹⁵ and if one weighed down by his load calls upon [another] to help him carry it, nothing thereof may be carried [by that other], even if it be one's near of kin. ¹⁶ Hence, thou canst [truly] warn only those who stand in awe of their Sustainer although He is beyond the reach of their perception, ¹⁷ and are constant in prayer, and [know that] whoever grows in purity, attains to purity but for the good of his own self, and [that] with God is all journeys' end.
Rashad Khalifa	35:18 No soul can carry the sins of another soul. If a soul that is loaded with sins implores another to bear part of its load, no other soul can carry any part of it, even if they were related. The only people to heed your warnings are those who reverence their Lord, even when alone in their privacy, and observe the Contact Prayers (Salat). Whoever purifies his soul, does so for his own good. To GOD is the final destiny.
Shabbir Ahmed	35:18 And no person, being already burdened with his own doings, will be made to carry the burden of another. And if a laden one calls for help with his load, none can carry part of it even if he is a close relative. So, you can warn only those who understand their Lord's law of Recompense knowing that even their actions done in secrecy have consequences. So, such people follow the Divine Commands closely. Whoever grows in virtue does so for the good of his own 'self'. And the destination of all is to God.

Muhammad Asad	35:28 and (as) there are in men, and in crawling beasts, and in cattle, too, many hues? ¹⁹ Of all His servants, only such as are endowed with [innate] knowledge stand [truly] in awe of God: ²⁰ [for they alone comprehend that,] verily, God is almighty, much-forgiving.
Rashad Khalifa	35:28 Also, the people, the animals, and the livestock come in various colors. This is why the people who truly reverence GOD are those who are knowledgeable. GOD is Almighty, Forgiving.
Shabbir Ahmed	35:28 And of human beings, the crawling creatures and related animals, and the cattle have diverse colors and properties. This is why of all His servants only those with knowledge of sciences can get some idea of the glory of God (by examining the wonders in nature). Surely, God is Almighty, Absolver of imperfections. ¹⁰

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (35:1)

Angels are powers used by God. The word janaha (plural ajniha) is used 9 times in the Quran to mean "incline" (8:61) or wing of compassion and protection (15:88; 18:24; 20:22; 26:215; 28:32), bird's wing (6:38) and here, which can be understood as a wing of compassion and protection. However, considering another meaning of the word, side" we may understand it as" dimension." Angels are not like birds and the odd numbers of "wings" turn it into a metaphor, rather than bird's wings.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (35:10)

The principles advocated by the Quran build excellent qualities for individuals as well as communities. For the word izza (dignity, prestige) see, 3:26; 19:81; 4:139; 35:10; 38:2; 63:8.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (35:11)

Could the "book" or "record" mentioned here be the DNA, which consists of various combinations of four molecules in a double helix? We learned recently that our lifespan is determined by some genes in our DNA.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (35:14)

Muslim leaders such as Jesus, Mary, Muhammad, Ali will reject those who worship them.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (35:22)

Polytheists are likened to dead people. 6:122; 27:80; 30:50-52.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (35:27)

The audience of the Quran is everyone. For a farmer, the color of the soil provides valuable information about its use. For a scientist, the colorful stripes indicate different geologic layers or archeological evidences. For a painter, such a view is excellent artwork worth copying onto a canvas. For a miner, the color of the earth is as important as the color of gold and rock. For another one, the wisdom in the appearance of a raven sitting on the edge of a hill is as important as the others are (20:114).

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (35:43)

Those who follow Muhammad's sunna (law) rather than God's sunna are addressed by this verse. See 33:38.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (35:1)

The "wings" of the spiritual beings or forces comprised within the designation of angels are, obviously, a metaphor for the speed and power with which God's revelations are conveyed to His prophets. Their multiplicity ("two, or three, or four") is perhaps meant to stress the countless ways in which He causes His commands to materialize within the universe created by Him: an assumption which, to my mind, is supported by an authentic hadith to the effect that on the night of his Ascension (see Appendix IV) the Prophet saw Gabriel "endowed with six hundred wings" (Bukhari and Muslim, on the authority of Ibn Mas'ud).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (35:1)

I.e., the process of creation is continuous, constantly expanding in scope, range and variety.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (35:3)

See 10:31 and the corresponding note 49.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (35:3)

Sc., "inasmuch as you attribute divine qualities or powers to anyone or anything beside Him". For an explanation of the phrase anna tu fakun (lit., "how turned-away you are", i.e., from the truth), see surah 5 note 90.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (35:5)

See 31:33 (which is phrased in exactly the same way) and the corresponding note 30. As regards the explicit reference to Satan in the next verse of the present surah, see Razi's remarks quoted in note 31 on 14:22, as well as note 16 on 15:17.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (35:8)

See surah 14 note 4, which explains my rendering of this sentence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (35:10)

It appears that in this context - as in the first paragraph of 10:21 or in 34:33 - both the noun makr (lit., "a scheme", or "scheming" or "plotting") and the verb yamkurun (lit., "they scheme" or "plot") have the connotation of "devising false [or "fallacious"] arguments" against something that is true. Since the preceding passages refer to God's creativeness and, in particular, to His power to create life and resurrect the dead (verse 9), the "evil deeds" spoken of above are, presumably, specious arguments meant to "disprove" the announcement of resurrection.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (35:11)

See second half of note 47 on 3:59, and note 4 on 23:12.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (35:11)

Lit., "makes you pairs" or "mates (of one another)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (35:12)

This interpolated sentence reflects Razi's convincing explanation of the passage that follows here, and its connection with the preceding one.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (35:12)

For this rendering of al-bahran, see note 41 on 25:53.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (35:13)

See surah 13 note 5.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (35:14)

The Qur'an states in many places that all false objects of worship - whether saints, angels, relics, fetishes, or deified forces of nature - will "bear witness" against their one-time worshippers on Resurrection Day, and will "disown" them: a symbolic allusion to man's perception, at the end of time, of the ultimate reality.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (35:16)

See note 27 on 14:19.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (35:18)

I.e., on Judgment Day - for "whatever [wrong] any human being commits rests upon him alone" (6:164, which is followed by a sentence identical with the one above).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (35:18)

Thus, any transfer of moral responsibility from one person to another is shown to be impossible. Whereas the first part of the above statement implies a negation of the Christian doctrine of "original sin" with which mankind is supposedly burdened, the second part categorically refutes the doctrine of the "vicarious atonement" of that sin by Jesus. (See also 53:38 and the corresponding note 31.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (35:18)

For an explanation of this rendering of bi'l-ghayb, see surah 2 note 3. The meaning is that only those "who believe in the existence of that which is beyond the reach of human perception" can really benefit by the "warning" inherent in the preceding statement. (See also 27:80-81 and 30:52-53.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (35:24)

One of the meanings of the term ummah (preferred by Zamakhshari in his commentary on the above verse) is "people of one time" or "age"; another, "people of one kind", i.e., "a nation" or a community" (which is adopted by me in this context). Taking into consideration a third, well-established meaning, namely, "a (particular) way of life" or "of behaviour" (Jawhari), the term "community" comes, in this instance, close to the modern concept of "civilization" in its historical sense. The stress on the warners (i.e., prophets) having "passed away" is meant to emphasize the humanness and mortality of each and all of them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (35:28)

Cf. 16:13, where the splendour of nature ("the beauty of many hues") is spoken of as an evidence of God's creative power.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (35:28)

I.e., spiritual knowledge, born of the realization that the phenomena which can be observed do not comprise the whole of reality, inasmuch as there is "a realm beyond the reach of a created being's perception" (cf. surah 2 note 3).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (35:31)

For this explanatory rendering of the phrase ma bayna yadayhi, see note 3 on 3:3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (35:32)

See 7:46 and the corresponding note 37.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (35:33)

Regarding this symbolic "adornment" of the blessed in paradise, see note 41 on 18:31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (35:39)

See note 22 on 2:30. In this instance, God's having made man "inherit the earth" implies the grant to him of the ability to discern between right and wrong as well as between truth and falsehood.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (35:40)

Lit., "those [God-] partners of yours": see note 15 on 6:22.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (35:40)

I.e., to those who ascribe divinity to beings or forces other than God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (35:40)

Cf. 30:35 - "Have We ever bestowed upon them from on high a divine writ which would speak [with approval] of their worshipping aught beside Us?" The reference to a "divine writ" makes it clear that the people spoken of here are the erring followers of earlier revelation, and not atheists.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (35:40)

I.e., their expectation that the saints whom they invest with divine or semi-divine qualities will "mediate" between them and God, or "intercede" for them before Him, is based on nothing but wishful thinking.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (35:41)

Lit., "the heavens"- in this case apparently a metonym for all the stars, galaxies, nebulae, etc., which traverse the cosmic spaces in obedience to a most intricate system of God-willed laws, of which the law of gravity, perhaps most obvious to man, is but one.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (35:41)

Lit., "after Him". This seems to be an allusion to the Last Hour, which, according to the Qur'an, will be heralded by a cosmic catastrophe.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (35:41)

I.e., inasmuch as He does not speed up the end of the world despite the sinfulness of most of its inhabitants, and neither punishes without giving the sinner time to reflect and to repent (cf. verse 45).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (35:42)

Cf. 6:157 and the corresponding note 158.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (35:43)

I.e., the way (sunnah) in which God has punished them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (35:43)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (35:45)

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (36:1)

Y10S60. The combination of these letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. For the meaning of these letters, see 1:1; 2:1; 40:1; 13:38; 46:10; 74:1-56.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (36:10)

See 57:22-23.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (36:40)

The expression KuLlun FiY FaLaK (each in an orbit) describing the motion of the sun, moon, and earth is palindromic. The letters of the expression (K, L, F, Y, F, L, K), with its cyclic nature, symbolizes the circular/ellipsoid orbits. Similar expression is found at 21:33. The Quran is an interesting book (72:1). Note that the Arabic word kul (all) refers to more than two bodies and it should include the sun, the moon, and the reference planet from the expression "night and day." It is also noteworthy that the Quran frequently uses the expression, "alternation of night and day" rather than "rotation of the Sun," pulling our attention to the rotation of the planet around itself. See 21:33; 27:88; 39:5; 68:1; 79:30.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (36:61)

Compare it to the New Testament verse: ""Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, 'Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve'" (Luke 4:8).

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (36:70)

It is an implicit and ironic prophecy of the Quran that the chapter containing the only verse stating that the Quran was revealed to remind the living people, has been dedicated to dead people. Those who follow hadith and sectarian teachings recite this chapter in funerals. In opposition to the Quran, "living" people recite these verses for the dead, who do not hear. According to the Quran, those people are no different than the dead people. A class of people getting paid for reciting a book that they do not appreciate nor understand over the dead people who also do neither, is one of the strangest affairs.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (36:79)

After reminding us that He knows all kinds of creation, God gives us the recreation of energy stored in plants through photosynthesis as fossil fuels such as coal or petroleum. Indeed, conservation of energy and its transformation from physical into chemical form and vice versa, is a good example of resurrection. See 4:82.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (36:82)

The creation of universe is the result of such an instant order. See 21:30.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (36:1)

Whereas some of the classical commentators incline to the view that the letters y-s (pronounced ya sin) with which this surah opens belong to the category of the mysterious letter-symbols (al-muqatta'at) introducing a number of Quranic chapters (see Appendix II), Abd Allah ibn Abbas states that they actually represent two distinct words, namely the exclamatory particle ya ("O") and sin, which in the dialect of the tribe of Tayy is synonymous with insan ("human being" or "man"): hence, similar to the two syllables ta ha in surah 20, ya sin denotes "O thou human being!" This interpretation has been accepted by Ikrimah, Ad-Dahhak, Al-Hasan al-Basri, Sa'id ibn Jubayr, and other early Qur'an-commentators (see Tabari, Baghawi, Zamakhshari, Baydawi, Ibn Kathir, etc.). According to Zamakhshari, it would seem that the syllable sin is an abbreviation of unaysin, the diminutive form of insan used by the Tayy in exclamations. (It is to be borne in mind that in classical Arabic a diminutive is often expressive of no more than endearment: e.g., ya bunayya, which does not necessarily signify "O my little son" but, rather, "my dear son" irrespective of the son's age.) On the whole, we may safely assume that the words ya sin apostrophize the Prophet Muhammad, who is explicitly addressed in the sequence, and are meant to stress - as the Qur'an so often does - the fact of his and all other apostles' humanness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (36:3)

This statement explains the adjurative particle wa (rendered by me as "Consider") at the beginning of the preceding verse - namely: "Let the wisdom apparent in the Qur'an serve as an evidence of the fact that thou art an apostle of God". As regards my rendering of al-Qur'an al-Hakim as "this Qur'an full of wisdom", see note 2 on 10:1.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (36:5)

Cf. 34:50 - "if I am on the right path, it is but by virtue of what my Sustainer reveals unto me".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (36:6)

Cf. 6:131-132. In the wider sense of this expression, the "forefathers" may be a metonym for a community's cultural past: hence, the reference to those "forefathers" not having been "warned" (i.e., against evil) evidently alludes to the defectiveness of the ethical heritage of people who have become estranged from true moral values.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (36:7)

Lit., "has come true", the past tense indicating the inevitability of its "coming true" - i.e., taking effect.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (36:8)

Zamakhshari: "[This is] an allegory of their deliberate denial of the truth." See note 13 on 13:5 and note 44 on 34:33.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (36:8)

Sc., "and they cannot see the right way" (Razi); their "forced-up heads" symbolize also their arrogance. On the other hand, God's "placing shackles" around the sinners' necks is a metaphor similar to His "sealing their hearts and their hearing", spoken of in 2:7 and explained in the corresponding note 7. The same applies to the metaphor of the "barriers" and the "veiling" mentioned in the next verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (36:9)

Sc., "so that they can neither advance nor go back": a metaphor of utter spiritual stagnation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (36:11)

Lit., "who is following the reminder".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (36:14)

As is usual with such passages, the commentators advance various speculations as to the "identity" of the town and the apostles. Since, however, the story is clearly described as a parable, it must be understood as such and not as an historical narrative. It seems to me that we have here an allegory of the three great monotheistic religions, successively propounded by Moses, Jesus and Muhammad, and embodying, essentially, the same spiritual truths. The "township" (qaryah) mentioned in the parable represents, I think, the common cultural environment within which these three religions appeared. The apostles of the first two are said to have been sent "together", implying that the teachings of both were - and are - anchored in one and the same scripture, the Old Testament of the Bible. When, in the course of time, their impact proved insufficient to mould the ethical attitude of the people or peoples concerned, God "strengthened" them by means of His final message, conveyed to the world by the third and last of the apostles, Muhammad.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (36:15)

Cf. 6:91 - "no true understanding of God have they when they say, 'Never has God revealed anything unto man.'" See also 34:31 and the corresponding note 38. Both these passages, as well as the one above, allude to people who like to think of themselves as "believing" in God without, however, allowing their "belief" to interfere in the practical concerns of their lives: and this they justify by conceding to religion no more than a vaguely emotional role, and by refusing to admit the fact of objective revelation - for the concept of revelation invariably implies a promulgation, by God, of absolute moral values and, thus, a demand for one's self-surrender to them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (36:18)

For an explanation of the phrase tatayyarna bikum, see surah 7 note 95.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (36:19)

Cf. 17:13 - "every human being's destiny (ta'ir) have We tied to his neck" - and the corresponding note 17.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (36:19)

For this rendering of musrifun (sing. musrif), see note 21 on the last sentence of 10:12.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (36:26)

I.e., by the apostles or, more probably (in view of the allegorical character of this story), by his own insight. The intervention of the man who "came running from the farthest end of the city" is evidently a parable of the truly believing minority in every religion, and of their desperate, mostly unavailing endeavours to convince their erring fellow-men that God-consciousness alone can save human life from futility.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (36:30)

Lit., "Oh, the regrets upon the bondmen" (al-ibad) - since all human beings, good or bad, are God's "bondmen". This phrase alludes to the Day of Judgment - which is described in 19:39 as "the Day of Regrets" - as well as to the fact, repeatedly stressed in the Qur'an, that most human beings choose to remain deaf to the voice of truth, and thus condemn themselves to spiritual death.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (36:31)

I.e., to the people now living. As in many other Quranic passages, the term qarn, which literally signifies a "generation" or "people living at the same period", has in this context the wider meaning of "society" or "civilization" in the historical connotation of these terms. Thus, the downfall and utter disappearance of past societies and civilizations is here linked to their spiritual frivolity and consequent moral failure. A further lesson to be drawn from this parable is the implied conclusion that the majority of people in every society, at all times (our own included), refuse to be guided by moral considerations, regarding them as opposed to their conventional mode of life and their pursuit of materialistic values - with the result that "never has an apostle come to them without their deriding him".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (36:36)

Lit., "who has created all the pairs out of whatever the earth produces, and out of themselves, and out of that of which they have no knowledge": a reference to the polarity evident in all creation, both animate and inanimate, which expresses itself in the existence of antithetic and yet complementary forces, like the sexuality in human beings, animals and plants, light and darkness, heat and cold, positive and negative magnetism and electricity, the positive and negative charges (protons and electrons) in the structure of the atom, and so forth. (It is to be borne in mind that the noun zawj denotes both "a pair" and "one of a pair", as explained in note 7 on 13:3.) The mention of "that of which they have no knowledge" evidently relates to things or phenomena not yet understood by man but potentially within the range of his comprehension: hence my interpolation, between brackets, of the words "as yet".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (36:38)

In the generally-accepted reading, this phrase is spelled li-mustaqarrin laha, which may be rendered as above or, more conventionally, as "to its point of rest", i.e., the time (or point) of the daily sunset (Razi). However, Abd Allah ibn Mas'ud is reliably reported to have read these words as la mustaqarra laha (Zamakhshari), which gives us the meaning of "it runs [on its course] without having any rest", i.e., unceasingly.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (36:39)

This is, in a condensed form, the meaning of the noun urjun - the raceme of the date-palm, which, when old and dry, becomes slender and curves like a crescent (cf. Lane V, 1997).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (36:40)

Lit., "nor does the night outrun [or "outstrip"] the day".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (36:41)

Lit., "in the laden ship": a generic singular with a plural significance. The term "offspring" denotes here the human race as a whole (cf. the recurring expression "children of Adam").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (36:42)

Cf. 16:8 and the corresponding note 6. In both of these passages man's ingenuity is shown to be a direct manifestation of God's creativeness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (36:45)

For an explanation of this rendering of the above phrase, see surah 2 note 247. In the present instance it apparently denotes men's conscious doings as well as their unconscious or half-conscious motivations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (36:46)

Or: "no sign of their Sustainer's signs" - since the noun ayah, repeated several times in the preceding passage, denotes "a message" as well as "a sign".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (36:47)

In Quranic usage, the verb anfaqa (lit., "he spent") invariably signifies one's spending on others, or for the good of others, whatever the motive. The ethical importance of this "spending on others" is frequently stressed in the Quran, and is embodied in the concept of zakah, which denotes "purifying dues" or, in its broader sense, "charity" (see note 34 on 2:43).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (36:49)

Lit., "they wait for nothing but a single blast", etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (36:56)

In the Quranic descriptions of paradise, the term zill ("shade") and its plural zilal is often used as a metaphor for

"happiness" - thus, for instance, in 4:57, where zill zilil signifies "happiness abounding" (see surah 4 note 74) - while the "couches" on which the blessed are to recline are obviously a symbol of inner fulfillment and peace of mind, as pointed out by Razi in his comments on 18:31 and 55:54.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (36:58)

This composite expression is, I believe, the nearest approach in English to the concept of salam in the above context. For a further explanation of this term, see note 29 on 5:16, where salam is rendered as "salvation".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (36:60)

For the meaning of what the Qur'an describes as "worship of Satan", see note 33 on 19:44.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (36:63)

The phrase "This, then, is the hell" points to the fact that the sinners' realization of their having gone astray despite repeated warnings by the prophets will, in itself, be a source of intense suffering (adhab) in the life to come. The element of repetition or persistence is implied in the use of the auxiliary verb kuntum both here and in the next verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (36:65)

A metaphor for their being unable really to excuse or defend their past actions and attitudes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (36:66)

Lit., "We could surely have effaced their eyes": a metaphor for "We could have created them morally blind" and, thus, devoid of all sense of moral responsibility - which, in its turn, would constitute a negation of all spiritual value in human life as such. (Cf. 2:20 - "if God so willed, He could indeed take away their hearing and their sight".)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (36:66)

In this instance - as, e.g., in 20:96 - the verb basura ("he became seeing" or "he saw") is obviously used in its tropical sense of "perceiving [something] mentally". According to Ibn Abbas as quoted by Tabari, the phrase anna yubsirun signifies "how could they perceive the truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (36:67)

Lit., "transformed [or "transmuted"] them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (36:67)

I.e., if it had been God's will that men should have no freedom of will or moral choice, He would have endowed them from the very beginning with a spiritually and morally stationary nature, entirely rooted in their instincts ("in their places"), devoid of all urge to advance, and incapable either of positive development or of retreat from a wrong course.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (36:68)

I.e., man should never postpone his exercise of moral choice - for if human beings are superior creatures inasmuch as they have been endowed with the faculty of discernment and a wide measure of free will, let them also remember that "man has been created weak" (4:28) and liable to decline still further in old age, so that the time at his disposal is short.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (36:69)

This passage resumes the theme enunciated in the opening verses of this surah, namely, the revelation of the Qur'an. As in 26:224, we have here an allusion to the allegation of Muhammad's opponents, in his own as well as in later times, that what he described as divine revelation was in reality an outcome of his own poetic invention.

This the Qur'an refutes by alluding to the fundamental difference between poetry - especially Arabic poetry - and divine revelation as exemplified by the Qur'an: whereas in the former the meaning is often subordinated to the rhythm and the melody of language, in the Qur'an the exact opposite is the case, inasmuch as here the choice of words, their sound and their position in the sentence - and, hence, its rhythm and melody - are always subordinated to the meaning intended. (Cf. also 26:225 and the corresponding note 100.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (36:69)

For this composite rendering of the adjective mubin, see surah 12 note 2. Literally, the above phrase reads, "a reminder and a [divine] discourse", etc., with the conjunctive particle wa ("and") being used here, as in 15:1, to point out that the Qur'an is an integral element in the process of divine revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (36:70)

Lit., "may come [or "be proved"] true", i.e., on the Day of Judgment (cf. verse 7 of this surah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (36:71)

I.e., "which We alone have or could have created" (Zamakhshari and Razi). The above metaphorical expression is based on the concept of "handiwork" in its widest sense, abstract as well as concrete.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (36:72)

Lit., "made them submissive (dhallalnaha) to them": implying also that man is morally responsible for the manner in which he uses or misuses them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (36:74)

Or: "other deities beside God" - alluding, in either case, to objects of worship consciously conceived as such - i.e., idols, imaginary deities, deified persons, saints, etc. - as well as to abstract concepts like power, wealth or "luck", which may not be consciously "worshipped" but are nevertheless often revered in an almost idolatrous fashion. The verb ittakhadhu (lit., "they took [or "have taken"] for themselves"), used in the Qur'an in this and in similar contexts, is particularly suited for the wide range of meanings alluded to inasmuch as it bears the connotation of adopting something - whether it be concrete or abstract - for one's own use or adoration.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (36:75)

Lit., "them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (36:77)

See similar passage in 16:4, as well as the corresponding note 5. Completing the interpretation advanced in his (and Zamakhshari's) commentary on the above-mentioned verse, Razi equates here the term khasim (lit., "contender in argument") with the highest manifestation of what is described as natiq ("articulate [or "rational"] being").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (36:78)

Lit., "he coins for Us a simile (mathal)" - an elliptic allusion to the unwillingness of "those who deny the truth" to conceive of a transcendental Being, fundamentally different from all that is graspable by man's senses or imagination, and having powers beyond all comparison with those which are available to any of the created beings. (Cf. 42:11, "there is nothing like unto Him", and 112:4, "there is nothing that could be compared with Him".) Since they are enmeshed in a materialistic outlook on life, such people deny - as the sequence shows - all possibility of resurrection, which amounts to a denial of God's creative powers and, in the final analysis, of His existence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (36:80)

Cf. the ancient Arabian proverb, "In every tree there is a fire" (Zamakhshari): evidently an allusion to the metamorphosis of green - i.e., water-containing - plants into fuel, be it through desiccation or man-made carbonization (charcoal), or by a millennial, subterranean process of decomposition into oil or coal. In a spiritual sense, this "fire" seems also to symbolize the God-given warmth and light of human reason spoken of in verse 77 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (36:82)

This is the meaning of the phrase innama amruhu - the term amr being synonymous, in this instance, with shan ("state [or "manner"] of being"). The exclusiveness of God's creative Being is stressed by the restrictive particle innama.

It is noteworthy that the gematrical value of "Rashad" (505), plus the gematrical value of "Khalifa" (725), plus the sura number (36), plus the number of verses (83), produces a total that is a multiple of 19 ($505 + 725 + 36 + 83 = 1349 = 19 \times 71$). Also, Sura 36 is number 19 among the 29 initial suras.

End Notes

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (37:1)

Regarding the adjectival particle wa and my rendering it as "Consider", see first half of note 23 on 74:32. Most of the classical commentators assume that verses 1-3 refer to angels - an assumption which Abu Muslim al-Isfahani (as quoted by Razi) rejects, stating that the passage refers to the true believers among human beings. However, Razi advances yet another (and, to my mind, most convincing) interpretation, suggesting that what is meant here are the messages (ayat) of the Qur'an, which - in the commentator's words - "deal with various subjects, some speaking of the evidence of God's oneness or of the evidence of His omniscience, omnipotence and wisdom, and some setting forth the evidence of [the truth of] prophetic revelation or of resurrection, while some deal with man's duties and the laws [relating thereto], and yet others are devoted to the teaching of high moral principles; and these messages are arranged in accordance with a coherent system above all [need of] change or alteration, so that they resemble beings or things standing 'in serried ranks'."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (37:5)

Sc., "and of sunset" (cf. 55:17 and the corresponding note 7). The stress on the various "points of sunrise" (al-mashariq) brings out the endless variety of all created phenomena as contrasted with the oneness and uniqueness of their Creator. The mention of "the points of sunrise" and omission of "the points of sunset" in the wording (though not in the meaning) of the above phrase alludes, I believe, to the light-giving quality of the Qur'an spoken of in verses 1-3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (37:7)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (37:10)

Lit., "excepting [or "except that"] anyone who ", etc. However, as pointed out by some authorities (e.g., Mughni), the particle illa is occasionally synonymous with the simple conjunction Wa, which in this case has the significance of "but".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (37:10)

For the meaning of this phrase, see note 17 on 15:18. After the stress on God's oneness in verses 4-5, the passage comprising verses 6-10 points to the fact that human beings are precluded from really grasping the variety and depth of the universe created by Him. We have here an echo of 34:9 - "Are they, then, not aware of how little of the sky and the earth lies open before them, and how much is hidden from them?" - and, thus, a new, oblique approach to the theme of resurrection, which is taken up in the sequence in the form of an indirect question.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (37:11)

I.e., out of primitive substances existing in their elementary forms in and on the earth (see surah 23, note 4) - substances which are as nothing when compared with the complexity of "the heavens and the earth and all that is between them": hence, man's individual resurrection is as nothing when compared with the creation of the multiform universe.

According to almost all of the earliest authorities - including Umar ibn al-Khattab, Abd Allah ibn Abbas, Qatadah, Mujahid, As-Suddi, Sa'id ibn Jubayr, Al-Hasan al-Basri, etc., - the expression azwaj denotes here "people resembling one another [in their dispositions]", or "people of the same kind" or "of the same ilk".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (37:27)

Cf. the contrasting - though verbally identical - passage in verses 50 ff. of the present surah. Whereas in the latter instance the verb yatasa alun has its primary connotation of "asking one another [about something]", it signifies here "demanding [something] of one another" - as the sequence shows, to assume responsibility for their erstwhile denial of the truth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (37:28)

I.e., "claiming that what you were asking us to do was right and good". The idiomatic phrase "approaching one from the right" is more or less synonymous with "pretending to give a morally good advice", as well as "approaching another person from a position of power and influence" (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (37:32)

For an explanation see 28:62-64 and the corresponding notes.

Lit., "for [or "for the sake of"] a mad poet" - thus alluding to the allegation that the Qur'an is a product of Muhammad's mind (see note 38 on 36:69). The reference to "deities" comprises, in this context, everything that man may "worship" in both the literal and the metaphorical senses of this word.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (37:37)

See surah 2, note 5. It is to be borne in mind that this refers to the fundamental teachings, which have always been the same in every true religion, and not to the many time-bound laws evident in the earlier religious codes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (37:40)

Lit., "sincere servants". In contrast to the principle that "a bad deed will be requited with no more than the like thereof", implied in the preceding verse, the Qur'an states here that he who "shall come [before God] with a good deed will receive ten times the like thereof" (see 6:160).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (37:41)

Lit., "a known sustenance". For a tentative explanation of this phrase, see note 17 on 2:25.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (37:44)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (37:48)

See note 46 on 38:52, where the expression qasirat at-tarf (lit., "such as restrain their gaze") appears for the first time in the chronology of Quranic revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (37:49)

This is an ancient Arabian figure of speech derived from the habit of the female ostrich, which buries its eggs in the sand for protection (Zamakhshari). Its particular application to the women who attain to paradise becomes clear from 56:34 ff., which states that all righteous women, irrespective of their age and condition at the time of death, will be resurrected as beautiful maidens.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (37:50)

Cf. verse 27 above and the corresponding note 11. Like the mutual reproaches of the sinners in that passage, the "conversation" of the blessed which follows here is, of course, allegorical, and is meant to stress the continuity of individual consciousness in the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (37:62)

According to the lexicographers, the noun zaqqum (which occurs, apart from the present instance, in 44:43 and in 56:52 as well) denotes any "deadly food"; hence, the expression shajarat az-zaqqum, a symbol of hell, may be appropriately rendered as "the tree of deadly fruit" (undoubtedly identical with "the tree cursed in this Qur'an", mentioned in 17:60), symbolizing the fact that the otherworldly sufferings which the Qur'an describes as "hell" are but the fruit - i.e., organic consequence - of one's evil deeds done on earth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (37:63)

It cannot be often enough repeated that all Quranic references to hell and paradise - and, for that matter, all descriptions of men's conditions in the hereafter - are, of necessity, highly allegorical (see Appendix I) and therefore liable to be grossly misunderstood if one takes them in their literal sense or, conversely, interprets them in an arbitrary manner (cf. 3:7 and the corresponding notes 5, 7 and 8): and this, to my mind, explains why the symbol of the "tree of deadly fruit" - one of the metonyms for the suffering of the sinners in the hereafter - has become "a trial (fitnah) for evildoers" (or "for men" in 17:60). See in this connection 74:31, which is the earliest Quranic instance of this concept of "trial".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (37:65)

According to Zamakhshari, "this purely verbal metaphor (isti'arah lafziyyah) is meant to express the ultimate in repulsiveness and ugliness . . . inasmuch as Satan is considered to be the epitome of all that is evil".

I.e., blind imitation (taqlid) of the - obviously absurd - beliefs, valuations and customs of one's erring predecessors, and disregard of all evidence of the truth supplied by both reason and divine revelation, is here shown to be the principal cause of the suffering referred to in the preceding passage (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (37:74)

Abraham's argument goes thus: "Do you believe in the existence of a Creator and Lord of the universe? " - a question which his people were bound to answer in the affirmative, since belief in a Supreme Deity was an integral part of their religion. The next stage of the argument would be: "How, then, can you worship idols - the work of your own hands - side by side with the idea of a Creator of the universe?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (37:88)

Obviously an allusion to his early, futile attempts at identifying God with the stars, the sun or the moon (see 6:76-78).

Lit., "attained to [the age of] walking [or "striving"] with him": evidently a metonym for the child's attaining to an age when he could understand, and share in, his father's faith and aims.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (37:103)

The above interpolation is, I believe, absolutely necessary for a proper understanding of this passage. As pointed out repeatedly in these notes, the verb aslama signifies, in Quranic usage, "he surrendered himself to God", or "to God's will", even if there is no express mention of God; hence, the dual form aslama occurring in the above verse might, on the face of it, have this meaning as well. Since, however, the sequence clearly shows that it was not God's will that Ishmael should be sacrificed, his and his father's "self-surrender to God's will" can have in this context only a purely subjective meaning - namely "to what they thought to be the will of God".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (37:105)

I.e., the moral significance of Abraham's dream-vision consisted in a test of his readiness to sacrifice, at what he thought to be God's behest (see preceding note), all that was dearest to him in life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (37:106)

I.e., a trial of this severity clearly implied that Abraham would be capable to bear it, and thus constituted a high moral distinction - in itself a reward from God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (37:107)

The epithet azim ("tremendous" or "mighty") renders it improbable that this sacrifice refers to nothing but the ram which Abraham subsequently found and slaughtered in Ishmael's stead (Genesis xxii, 13). To my mind, the sacrifice spoken of here is the one repeated every year by countless believers in connection with the pilgrimage to Mecca (al-hajj), which, in itself, commemorates the experience of Abraham and Ishmael and constitutes one of the "five pillars" of Islam. (See 22:27-37, as well as 2:196-203.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (37:108)

See note 30 on verse 78 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (37:113)

I.e., commit evil. With this prediction the Qur'an refutes, as in so many other places, the spurious contention of the Jews that they are "the chosen people" by virtue of their descent from Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and therefore a priori "assured", as it were, of God's acceptance. In other words, God's blessing a prophet or a saint does not, by itself, imply the conferment of any special status on his descendants.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (37:114)

I.e., in consideration of their own merit, and not because of their descent from Abraham and Isaac (see preceding verse and note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (37:117)

I.e., "the Torah, wherein there was guidance and light ... unto those who followed the Jewish faith" (5:44).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (37:123)

The Hebrew prophet Elijah (Ilyas in Arabic) is mentioned in the Bible (I Kings xvii ff. And II Kings i-ii) as having lived in the Northern Kingdom of Israel during the reigns of Ahab and Ahaziah - i.e., in the ninth century B.C. - and having been succeeded by Elisha (Al-Yasa in Arabic). The above stress on his, too, having been "one of the message-bearers" (min al-mursalin) recalls the Quranic principle that God makes "no distinction between any of His apostles" (cf. 2:136 and 285, 3:84, 4:152, and the corresponding notes).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (37:125)

As regards this rendering of ahsan al-khaliqin, see surah 23 note 6. The term bal (conventionally spelt Baal in European languages) signified "lord" or "master" in all branches of ancient Arabic, including Hebrew and Phoenician; it was an honorific applied to every one of the many 'male' deities worshipped by the ancient Semites, especially in Syria and Palestine. In the Old Testament this designation has sometimes the generic connotation of "idol-worship" - a sin into which, according to the Bible, the early Israelites often relapsed.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (37:130)

The form Il-Yasin in which this name appears in the above verse is either a variant of Ilyas (Elijah) or, more probably, a plural - "the Elijahs" - meaning "Elijah and his followers" (Tabari, Zamakhshari, et al.). According to Tabari, Abd Allah ibn Mas'ud used to read this verse as "Peace be upon Idrasin", which, apart from giving us a variant or a plural of Idris ("Idris and his followers"), lends support to the view that Idris and Ilyas are but two designations of one and the same person, the Biblical Elijah. (See also note 41 on 19:56.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (37:134)

See 7:80-84 and 11:69-83.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (37:135)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (37:138)

Lit., "you pass by them", i.e., by the places where they lived (see 15:76 and the corresponding note 55).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (37:140)

I.e., when he abandoned the mission with which he had been entrusted by God (see surah 21 note 83, which gives the first part of Jonah's story), and thus, in the words of the Bible (The Book of Jonah i, 3 and 10), committed the sin of "fleeing from the presence of the Lord". In its primary significance, the infinitive noun ibaq (derived from the verb abaqa) denotes "a slave's running - away from his master"; and Jonah is spoken of as having "fled like a runaway slave" because - although he was God's message-bearer - he abandoned his task under the stress of violent anger. The subsequent mention of "the laden ship" alludes to the central, allegorical part of Jonah's story. The ship ran into a storm and was about to founder; and the mariners "said everyone to his fellow, Come and let us cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us" (The Book of Jonah i, 7) - a procedure to which Jonah agreed.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (37:141)

Lit., "he cast lots [with the mariners], and was among the losers". According to the Biblical account (The Book of Jonah i, 10 - 15), Jonah told them that he had "fled from the presence of the Lord", and that it was because of this sin of his that they all were now in danger of drowning. "And he said unto them, Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know that for my sake this tempest is upon you So they took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea: and the sea ceased from her raging."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (37:142)

In all the three instances where Jonah's "great fish" is explicitly mentioned in the Qur'an (as al-hut in the above verse and in 68:48, and an-nun in 21:87), it carries the definite article al. This may possibly be due to the fact that the legend of Jonah was and is so widely known that every reference to the allegory of "the great fish" is presumed to be self-explanatory. The inside of the fish that "swallowed" Jonah apparently symbolizes the deep darkness of spiritual distress of which 21:87 speaks: the distress at having "fled like a runaway slave" from his prophetic mission and, thus, "from the presence of the Lord". Parenthetically, the story is meant to show that, since "man has been created weak" (4:28), even prophets are not immune against all the failings inherent in human nature.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (37:143)

I.e., to remember God and to repent: see 21:87, which reveals in its very formulation the universal purport of Jonah's story.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (37:146)

I.e., to shade and comfort him. Thus, rounding off the allegory of Jonah and the fish, the Qur'an points out in the figurative manner so characteristic of its style that God, who can cause a plant to grow out of the most arid and barren soil, can equally well cause a heart lost in darkness to come back to light and spiritual life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (37:148)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (37:158)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (37:158)

See Appendix III. Whereas most of the classical commentators are of the opinion that the term al-jinnah denotes here the angels, since they - like all beings of this category - are imperceptible to man's senses, I believe that the above verse refers to those intangible forces of nature which elude all direct observation and manifest themselves only in their effects: hence their designation, in this context, by the plural noun al-jinnah, which primarily denotes "that which is concealed from [man's] senses". Inasmuch as people who refuse to believe in God often tend to regard those elemental forces as mysteriously endowed with a purposeful creative power (cf. Bergson's concept of the elan vital), the Qur'an states that their votaries invent a "kinship" between them and God, i.e., attribute to them qualities and powers similar to His.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (37:158)

For this metaphorical attribution of "knowledge" to the elemental forces of nature, see verses 164-166 and the corresponding note 71.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (37:159)

See note 88 on the last sentence of 6:100.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (37:163)

True belief in God precludes all temptation to define Him who is indefinable, or to associate, conceptually, anyone or anything with Him; conversely, the blasphemy inherent in such attempts destroys the potential value of one's belief in God and, thus, brings about the spiritual ruin of the person concerned.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (37:164)

The metaphorical "saying" that follows is in tune with many other Quranic passages which speak of even inanimate objects as "praising God", e.g., "The seven heavens extol His limitless glory, and the earth, and all that they contain" (17:44), or "We caused the mountains to join David in extolling Our glory" (21:79), or "O you mountains! Sing with him the praise of God!" (34:10); similarly, even the shadows of material things are spoken of as "prostrating themselves before God" (16:48).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (37:168)

Lit., "a reminder (dhikr) from those of old": see note 72 on verses 69-70 above. Most of the commentators assume that the term dhikr connotes here, as so often in the Qur'an, a "divine writ". In my opinion, however, it is far more probable - because more in tune with the context - that in this case it signifies an ancestral tradition bearing on the (to them astonishing) message of God's oneness and uniqueness as promulgated by the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (37:175)

I.e., as people who are bent on deceiving themselves. In this context, the verb basura (lit., "he saw" or "became seeing") is used tropically, in the sense of "seeing mentally" or "gaining insight".

I.e., they will realize the truth as well as the suffering which its rejection entails: obviously a reference to the Day of Judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (37:176)

This is an allusion to the sarcastic demand of the people who refused to regard the Qur'an as a divine revelation, to be punished forthwith "if this be indeed the truth from God" (see 8:32 and the corresponding note 32).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 76 (37:177)

Lit., "when it alights in their courtyard, evil [or "hapless"] is the morning of those", etc. In ancient Arabic usage, the idiomatic phrase "chastisement [or "suffering"] has alighted (nazala) in so-and-so's courtyard" denotes its coming-down upon, or befalling, the person or persons concerned (Tabari). Similarly, the "morning" (sabah) is a metonym for "awakening".

Angels of God are not subject to the test like us; and they carry out God commandments, including taking the lives of children. In verses 37:101-113, Abraham told his son that he saw in his sleep (manam) that he was sacrificing him. The Quran does not state that God ordered him to do that. He fulfills his dream (not his literal interpretation of it though) by intending and attempting to sacrifice his son. So, God stops him from going further all the way. Though it was not God who ordered him to sacrifice his son, Abraham's perfect submission to his literal interpretation of his vision proved his sincerity. God saved Abraham from completing his misinterpretation of his dream. Abraham was wrong in literally interpreting his dream since the dream was a metaphor, a dramatic metaphor reminding him to make God his only priority by mentally giving up from being preoccupied with his dearest possession. Though his literal understanding was wrong, he demonstrated his perfect submission to God. He fulfilled the real meaning of the dream. God rewarded his intention, not his knowledge of interpretation. (For sleep and dream, see: See 25:47; 8:43; 12:6; 30:23; 39:42; 78:9). The ethical issue involving this dream has been extensively discussed since Socrates. In Plato's Euthyphro, Socrates asked a profound question, "is it right because God says so, or does God say so because it is right?" Because or therefore? The question assumes that God is different from the concept of goodness, while according to the Quran God is the Truth, the Wise, the Noble, and the Justice. The correct answer might be affirmative for both parts of the question. Sartre pulled our attention to a different epistemological problem with the story. He questioned the authenticity or reliability of the source. How could Abraham be sure that the voice was of divine origin, rather than of the devil? That is a legitimate question. If there is an Omnipotent and Omniscient God, and if that God wishes to communicate His will to humans without any doubt, He should be able to do so. Society will and should judge a person based on the principle of justice. Had Abraham lived today and had he managed to sacrifice his son, according to God's law, as a society we should hold him responsible for the murder.

However, we should remember that the ultimate judge is God on the Day of Judgment. See 7:28. Genesis 21:1-24; 22:1-19 tell the story of the sacrifice. Though the Quran does not give the identity of the child, Muslim scholars, perhaps because of a bias for the ancestor of the Arabs, to that coveted position have assigned Ishmael, Abraham's son from Hagar. The Old Testament, though, spells out Isaac, Abraham's son from Sara, the ancestor of the Children of Israel. However, the story contains some problems. According to the Bible, when Abraham attempted to sacrifice his son, his only son was Ishmael who was 13, while his second son Isaac was not even born yet (Genesis 16:16; 17:24; 21:5). This information contradicts the anonymous author of the Hebrews 11:17. How can Abraham sacrifice his only son" Isaac, when the younger Isaac was never Abraham's only son"? Biblical scholars try to get around this problem by claiming that Ishmael was an illegitimate child. Though Genesis 16:3 specifically considers Hagar to be Abraham's wife, the following verses refer to her as a mistress (Genesis 16:4-9). While Genesis 22:2 does not even consider the older Ishmael to be Abraham's son, New Testament's Galatians 4:22 writes about Abraham's two sons. Regardless of the relationship between Abraham and Hagar, blaming or demeaning a child because of his being born from a slave is an unjust discrimination. Even if the Biblical slander on Abraham's extramarital affair was true, holding an innocent child responsible for the sins of his parents is unjust both according to the Old Testament, Ezekiel 18:20, and the Quran 6:64.

Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 4 (37:102)

The Most Merciful never advocates evil (7:28). As with Job, Satan claimed that Abraham loved his son too much, and was permitted to put Abraham to that severetest.

Edip-Layth	38:24 He said, "He has wronged you by asking to combine your lambs with his lambs. Many who mix their properties take advantage of one another, except those who acknowledge and do good works, and these are very few." David guessed that We had tested him, so he sought forgiveness from his Lord, and fell down kneeling, and repented.⁵
The Monotheist Group	38:24 He said: "He has wronged you by asking to combine your lamb with his lambs. And many who mix their properties take advantage of one another, except those who believe and do good works, and these are very few." And David guessed that We had tested him, so he sought forgiveness from his Lord, and fell down kneeling, and repented.
Muhammad Asad	38:24 Said [David]: He has certainly wronged thee by demanding that thy ewe be added to his ewes! Thus, behold, do many kinsmen wrong one another ²³ [all] save those who believe [in God] and do righteous deeds: but how few are they!" And [suddenly] David understood that We had tried him: ²⁴ and so he asked his Sustainer to forgive him his sin, and fell down in prostration, and turned unto Him in repentance.
Rashad Khalifa	David's Exemplary Piety 38:24 He said, "He is being unfair to you by asking to combine your sheep with his. Most people who combine their properties treat each other unfairly, except those who believe and work righteousness, and these are so few." Afterwards, David wondered if he made the right judgment. He thought that we were testing him. He then implored his Lord for forgiveness, bowed down, and repented.
Shabbir Ahmed	38:24 David said, "He has certainly wronged you in demanding your farm in addition to his farms. Certainly, many close associates and partners (in business) treat each other unfairly, except those who believe (in the Law of Recompense) and care for others. And how few are they?" Afterwards, David thought that We had tried him. (The economic system in his kingdom needed reform.) He asked forgiveness of his Lord, bowed in humility and turned to Him (for guidance).

The Monotheist Group	38:26 O David, We have made you a successor on Earth. Therefore, you shall judge among the people with truth, and do not follow desire, lest it diverts you from the path of God. Indeed, those who stray off the path of God will have a severe retribution for forgetting the Day of Reckoning.
Muhammad Asad	38:26 [And We said:] O David! Behold, We have made thee a [prophet and, thus, Our] vicegerent on earth: judge, then, between men with justice, and do not follow vain desire, lest it lead thee astray from the path of God: verily, for those who go astray from the path of God there is suffering severe in store for having forgotten the Day of Reckoning!"
Rashad Khalifa	38:26 O David, we have made you a ruler on earth. Therefore, you shall judge among the people equitably, and do not follow your personal opinion, lest it diverts you from the way of GOD. Surely, those who stray off the way of GOD incur severe retribution for forgetting the Day of Reckoning.
Shabbir Ahmed	38:26 (We said to him), "O David! We have made you a ruler on the earth therefore, establish the System of justice and equity for people. Never let your judgment be swayed by personal whims causing you to deviate from the path of God. For those who wander from the path of God, is a strict retribution for having forgotten the Day of Account."

This letter/number plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. See 74:1-56; 1:1; 2:1; 13:38; 27:82; 38:1-8; 40:28-38; 46:10; 72:28.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (38:8)

Zikr (message) is another attribute used for the Quran or for a feature of the Quran. The word message in this verse might be referring to a particular message contained in the Quran. The Quran is message upon message, light upon light (24:35). Could the Quran contain another book coded within its text? For another aspect of the message, see 74:30-35. Also see 15:9; 21:2; 21:24,105; 26:5; 29:51; 38:1,8; 41:41; 44:13; 72:17; 74:49,54.

See 74:30.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (38:24)

We are not given the exact reason why David repented. Perhaps we are expected to ponder on our own. For instance, I find at least two reasons for what might have caused David to feel guilty. The complaint and his reaction to it might have reminded him of his own greed and injustice against others. Or perhaps, after making the judgment, he realized that he reached a verdict without listening to the other party. Justice cannot be adjudicated in an ex parte hearing. The plaintiff might be distorting or hiding some facts pertinent to the case. Even if we approach the case in terms of social justice, hearing the defendant is still important. For instance, the plaintiff in this case could have been the owner of vast lands, vineyards and farms, while the entire wealth of the other party could have been no more than a hundred sheep. The Quran mentions David's name 16 times and describes him in very positive words. He was blessed by God (17:55; 21:79; 34:10), knowledgeable (27:15), resourceful and obedient (38:17), caring and just (38:22-26). The Old Testament in 2 Samuel 12:1-14 tells a similar story about David with variable details. The Bible describes David as a good-looking young man (1 Samuel 17:25) and praises his intelligence and courage (1 Samuel 17:1-58), at age thirty he becomes king by divine direction (2 Samuel 2:1-4), and after some internal fights, finally becomes king over all of Israel (2 Samuel 4:1-12; 5:1-5; 1 Chronicles 11:1-3), brings the ark of the covenant to Jerusalem (Psalms 24:1-10), and extends his kingdom after fighting a series of wars and committing numerous massacres in a vast territory (2 Samuel 8:1-18; 8:3-13; 10:1-19; 18:7-27; 19:31; 21:11; 29:5).

However, the Bible that praises him for wars and bloody conquests, contains lengthy stories blaming him for being a sinful manipulator (2 Samuel 11:2-27), and a sinful proud man who angered God (2 Samuel 23:39), and having affairs with married women (1 Samuel 25:31-44). The Bible then tells us about the reformation of David by depicting him in his last moments as one with abiding faith and trust in God after his reign of forty years (2 Samuel 23:1-7; 2 Samuel 5:5; 1 Corinthians 3:4).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (38:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (38:1)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (38:1)

Or: "endowed with eminence" (Zamakhshari), since the term dhikr (lit., "reminder" or "remembrance") has also the connotation of "that which is remembered", i.e., "renown", "fame" and, tropically, "eminence". As regards the rendering preferred by me, see 21:10, where the phrase fih dhikr (relating, as above, to the Qur'an) has been translated as "wherein is found all that you ought to bear in mind", i.e., in order to attain to dignity and happiness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (38:2)

I.e., they refuse to acknowledge the fact of divine revelation because such an acknowledgment would imply an admission of man's responsibility to God - and this their false pride, manifested in their arrogant belief in man's "self-sufficiency", does not allow them to do. The same idea is expressed in 16:22 and, in a more general way, in 2:206. Cf. also 96:6-7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (38:3)

It is to be noted that the term qarn signifies not merely a "generation" but also - and quite frequently in the Qur'an - "people belonging to a particular period and environment", i.e., a "civilization" in the historical connotation of this word.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (38:3)

Lit., "while there was no time for escaping".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (38:4)

Although this passage describes, in the first instance, the attitude of the pagan Quraysh towards the Prophet, it touches upon the reluctance of most people, at all times, to recognize "a man from their own midst" - i.e., a human being like themselves - as God-inspired. (See note 2 on 50:2.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (38:5)

Divorced from its purely historical background, this criticism acquires a timeless significance, and may be thus paraphrased: "Does he claim that all creative powers and qualities are inherent exclusively in what he conceives as 'one God'?" - a paraphrase which illustrates the tendency of many people to attribute a decisive influence on human life - and, hence, a quasi-divine status - to a variety of fortuitous phenomena or circumstances (like wealth, "luck", social position, etc.) rather than to acknowledge the overwhelming evidence, in all observable nature, of God's unique existence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (38:6)

Lit., "a thing desired" or "to be desired", i.e., a sensible course of action.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (38:7)

I.e., "in any of the faiths prevalent in our days": an oblique reference to Christianity and its dogma of the Trinity, which contrasts with the Quranic concept of God's oneness and uniqueness, as well as to any other faith based on the belief in a multiplicity or multiform incarnation of divine powers (e.g., Hinduism with its triad of Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (38:8)

Lit., "that they are in doubt of": i.e., it is not the personality of the Prophet that fills them with distrust, but, rather, the substance of the message proclaimed by him - and, in particular, his insistence on God's absolute oneness and uniqueness, which runs counter to their habits of thought and social traditions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (38:8)

Sc., "on people who refuse to accept the truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (38:9)

I.e., "Do they think that it is for them to decide as to who should and who should not be graced with divine revelation?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (38:10)

I.e., "Do they think that human beings are so highly endowed that they are bound to attain, some day, to mastery over the universe and all nature, and thus to God-like power?" Cf. in this connection 96:6-8 and the corresponding note. As regards my rendering of al-asbab as "all [conceivable] means", see note 82 on 18:84.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (38:11)

The collective noun jund, which primarily denotes "a host" or "an army", has also the meaning of "created beings", in this context obviously human beings; in combination with the particle ma, "any number of human beings". The term hizb (of which ahzab is the plural), on the other hand, denotes "a party" or "a group of people of the same mind" or "people leagued together", i.e., for a definite purpose.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (38:12)

Lit., "before them", i.e., before the people who opposed or oppose Muhammad's message.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (38:12)

In classical Arabic, this ancient bedouin term is used idiomatically as a metonym for "mighty dominion" or "firmness of power" (Zamakhshari). The number of poles supporting a bedouin tent is determined by its size, and the latter has always depended on the status and power of its owner: thus, a mighty chieftain is often alluded to as "he of many tent-poles".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (38:15)

Sc., "beyond the term set for it by God".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (38:16)

Cf. 8:32. This mocking "demand" of the unbelievers is mentioned in several other places in the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (38:18)

Lit., "We compelled" or "constrained".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (38:19)

See surah 21 note 73.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (38:21)

The story which, according to the oldest sources at our disposal, is alluded to in verses 21-26 affects the question as to whether God's elect, the prophets - all of whom were endowed, like David, with "wisdom and sagacity in judgment" - could or could not ever commit a sin: in other words, whether they, too, were originally subject to the weaknesses inherent in human nature as such or were a priori endowed with an essential purity of character which rendered each of them incapable of sinning" (masum). In the form in which it has been handed down from the earliest authorities (including, according to Tabari and Baghawi, Companions like Abd Allah ibn Abbas and Anas ibn Malik, as well as several of the most prominent of their immediate successors), the story contradicts the doctrine - somewhat arbitrarily developed by Muslim theologians in the course of the centuries - that prophets cannot sin by virtue of their very nature, and tends to show that their purity and subsequent sinlessness is a result of inner struggles and trials and, thus, represents in each case a moral achievement rather than an inborn quality. As narrated in some detail by Tabari and other early commentators, David fell in love with a beautiful woman whom he accidentally observed from his roof terrace. On inquiring, he was told that she was the wife of one of his officers, named Uriah. Impelled by his passion, David ordered his field-commander to place Uriah in a particularly exposed battle position, where he would be certain to be killed; and as soon as his order was fulfilled and Uriah died, David married the widow (who subsequently became the mother of Solomon). This story agrees more or less with the Old Testament, which gives the woman's name as Bath-Sheba (II Samuel xi), barring the Biblical allegation that David committed adultery with her before Uriah's death (ibid. xi, 4-5) - an allegation which has always been rejected by Muslims as highly offensive and slanderous: cf. the saying of the fourth Caliph, Ali ibn Abi Talib (quoted by Zamakhshari on the authority of Sa'id ibn al-Musayyab): "If anyone should narrate the story of David in the manner in which the story-tellers narrate it, I will have him flogged with one hundred and sixty stripes - for this is a [suitable] punishment for slandering prophets" (thus indirectly recalling the Quranic ordinance, in 24:4, which stipulates flogging with eighty stripes for accusing ordinary persons of adultery without legal proof). According to most of the commentators, the two "litigants" who suddenly appeared before David were angels sent to bring home to him his sin. It is possible, however, to see in their appearance an allegory of David's own realization of having sinned: voices of his own conscience which at last "surmounted the walls" of the passion that had blinded him for a time.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (38:24)

The term khulata (sing. khalit) denotes, literally, "people who mix [i.e., are familiar or intimate] with others" or "with one another". In the present instance it evidently alludes to the "brotherhood" between the two mysterious litigants, and is therefore best rendered as "kinsmen".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (38:24)

Sc., "and that he had failed" (in the matter of Bath-Sheba).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (38:27)

Cf. 3:191. The above statement appears in the Qur'an in several formulations; see, in particular, note 11 on 10:5. In the present instance it connects with the mention of the Day of Reckoning in the preceding verse, thus leading organically from a specific aspect of David's story to a moral teaching of wider import.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (38:27)

I.e., a deliberate rejection of the belief that the universe - and, in particular, human life - is imbued with meaning and purpose leads unavoidably - though sometimes imperceptibly - to a rejection of all moral imperatives, to spiritual blindness and, hence, to suffering in the life to come.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (38:28)

By implication, belief in resurrection, judgment and life after death is postulated in this passage (verses 27-28) as a logical corollary - almost a premise - of all belief in God: for, since we see that many righteous people suffer all manner of misery and deprivations in this world, while, on the other hand, many of the wicked and depraved enjoy their lives in peace and affluence, we must either assume that God does not exist (because the concept of injustice is incompatible with that of Godhead), or - alternatively - that there is a hereafter in which both the righteous and the unrighteous will harvest in full what they had morally sown during their lives on earth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (38:30)

I.e., he would always think of God, as illustrated by the example given in the sequence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (38:32)

Lit., "because of [or "out of"] the remembrance of my Sustainer".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (38:32)

This and the preceding interpolation are based on Razi's interpretation of this passage.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (38:33)

The story of Solomon's love of beautiful horses is meant to show that all true love of God is bound to be reflected in one's realization of, and reverence for, the beauty created by Him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (38:34)

To explain this verse, some of the commentators advance the most fantastic stories, almost all of them going back to Talmudic sources. Razi rejects them all, maintaining that they are unworthy of serious consideration. Instead, he plausibly suggests that the "body" (jasad) upon Solomon's throne is an allusion to his own body, and - metonymically - to his kingly power, which was bound to remain "lifeless" so long as it was not inspired by God-willed ethical values. (It is to be borne in mind that in classical Arabic a person utterly weakened by illness, worry or fear, or devoid of moral values, is often described as "a body without a soul".) In other words, Solomon's early trial consisted in his inheriting no more than a kingly position, and it rested upon him to endow that position with spiritual essence and meaning.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (38:35)

I.e., a spiritual kingdom, which could not be inherited by anyone and, hence, would not be exposed to envy or worldly intrigue.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (38:36)

I.e., as a reward for his humility and turning-away from worldly ambitions, implied in the prayer, "Forgive me my sins".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (38:36)

Cf. 21:81 and the corresponding note 75. For the meaning, in general, of the many legends surrounding the person of Solomon, see note 77 on 21:82.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (38:38)

I.e., subdued and, as it were, tamed by him: see note 76 on 21:82, which explains my rendering, in this context, of shayatin as "rebellious forces".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (38:41)

See note 78 on 21:83.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (38:41)

I.e., with life-weariness in consequence of suffering. As soon as he realizes that God has been testing him, Job perceives that his utter despondency and weariness of life - eloquently described in the Old Testament (The Book of Job iii) - was but due to what is described as "Satan's whisperings": this is the moral to be drawn from the above evocation of Job's story.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (38:42)

According to the classical commentators, the miraculous appearance of a healing spring heralded the end of Job's suffering, both physical and mental.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (38:43)

Lit., "his family" (cf. 21:84 and the corresponding note 79).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (38:44)

In the words of the Bible (The Book of Job ii, 9), at the time of his seemingly hopeless suffering Job's wife reproached her husband for persevering in his faith: "Dost thou still retain thine integrity? Curse God, and die." According to the classical Qur'an-commentators, Job swore that, if God would restore him to health, he would punish her blasphemy with a hundred stripes. But when he did recover, he bitterly regretted his hasty oath, for he realized that his wife's "blasphemy" had been an outcome of her love and pity for him; and thereupon he was told in a revelation that he could fulfill his vow in a symbolic manner by striking her once with "a bunch of grass containing a hundred blades or more". (Cf. 5:89 - "God will not take you to task for oaths which you may have uttered without thought.")

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (38:46)

Lit., "of the [final] abode".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (38:48)

Al-Yasa in Arabic - the Biblical prophet who succeeded Elijah (see surah 37 note 48).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (38:48)

For an explanation of this rendering of dhu l-kifl, see surah 21, note 81.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (38:50)

In all the eleven instances in which the noun adn occurs in the Qur'an - and of which the present is the oldest - it is used as a qualifying term for the "gardens" (jannat) of paradise. This noun is derived from the verb adana, which primarily denotes "he remained [somewhere]" or "he kept [to something]", i.e., permanently: cf. the phrase adantu l-balad ("I remained for good [or "settled"] in the country"). In Biblical Hebrew - which, after all, is but a very ancient Arabian dialect - the closely related noun eden has also the additional connotation of "delight", "pleasure" or bliss". Hence the combination of the two concepts in my rendering of adn as "perpetual bliss". As in many other places in the Qur'an, this bliss is here allegorized - and thus brought closer to man's imagination - by means of descriptions recalling earthly joys.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (38:52)

Lit., "such as restrain their gaze", i.e., are of modest bearing and have eyes only for their mates (Razi). This allegorical reference to the delights of paradise occurs in the Qur'an three times (apart from the above instance, which is chronologically the earliest, in 37: 48 and 55: 56 as well). As an allegory, this phrase evidently applies to the righteous of both sexes, who in the life to come will be rejoined with those whom they loved and by whom they were loved in this world: for, "God has promised the believers, both men and women, gardens through which running waters flow, therein to abide, and goodly dwellings in gardens of perpetual bliss" (9:72); and, "anyone - be it man or woman - who does [whatever he can] of good deeds and is a believer withal, shall enter paradise" (4:124, with similar statements in 16:97 and 40:40). Finally, we are told in 36:56 that in this paradise "will they and their spouses on couches recline" - i.e., will find peace and inner fulfillment with and in one another. (For an explanation of the term atrab, rendered by me as "well-matched", see note 15 on 56:38.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (38:58)

Lit., "of its kind": i.e., corresponding in intensity to what the Qur'an describes as hamim and ghassaq. For my rendering of hamim as "burning despair", see surah 6 note 62. The term ghassaq, on the other hand, is derived from the verb ghasaqa, "it became dark" or "intensely dark" (Taj al-'Arus); thus, al-ghasiq denotes "black darkness" and, tropically, "the night" or, rather, "the black night". According to some authorities, the form ghassaq signifies "intense [or "icy"] cold". A combination of these two meanings gives us the concept of the "ice-cold darkness" of the spirit which, together with "burning despair" (hamim), will characterize the suffering of inveterate sinners in the life to come. All other interpretations of the term ghassaq are purely speculative and, therefore, irrelevant.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (38:59)

I.e., "people whom you had seduced, and who thereupon blindly followed you": an apostrophe stressing the double responsibility of the seducers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (38:59)

In Arabic usage, the phrase "no welcome to them" or "to you" (la marhaban bihim, resp. bikum) is equivalent to a curse. In this context - carried on into the next verse - it expresses a mutual disavowal of the seducers and the seduced.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (38:61)

Cf. 7:38 (and the corresponding notes 28 and 29) as well as 33:67-68.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (38:63)

I.e., the prophets and the righteous, who - as the Qur'an points out in many places - have always been derided by people enamoured of the life of this world and, therefore, averse to all moral exhortation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (38:69)

For the allegorical contention of the angels ("the host on high") against the creation of man, see 2:30 ff. and the corresponding notes 22-24. The allegory of man's creation, of God's command to the angels to "prostrate themselves" before the new creature, and of Iblis' refusal to do so appears in the Qur'an six times (2:30-34, 7:11 ff., 15:28-44, 17:61-65, 18:50, and -85), each time with an accent on a different aspect of this allegory. In the present instance (which is undoubtedly the earliest in the chronology of revelation) it is connected with the statement, in 2:31, that God "imparted unto Adam the names of all things", i.e., endowed man with the faculty of conceptual thinking (see note 23 on 2:31) and, thus, with the ability to discern between what is true and what false. Since he possesses this faculty, man has no excuse for not realizing God's existence and oneness - the "message tremendous" referred to in the preceding passage.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (38:70)

Lit., "otherwise than that I be (illa annama ana) a plain warner" - i.e., of the prospect of spiritual self-destruction inherent in a willful disregard of the fact of God's existence and oneness, which is the core of all religious cognition and, hence, of all true prophethood.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (38:71)

For this rendering of idh, see surah 2, note 21.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (38:71)

See note 24 on 15:26.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (38:72)

See 15:29 and the corresponding note 26.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (38:74)

See note 26 on 2:34 and note 31 on 15:41.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (38:75)

Cf. the metaphorical phrase "the things which Our hands have wrought" in 36:71, explained in the corresponding note 42. In the present instance, the stress lies on the God-willed superiority of man's intellect - which, like everything else in the universe, is God's "handiwork" - over the rest of creation (see note 25 on 2:34).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (38:75)

This "question" is, of course, only rhetorical, since God is omniscient. The phrase interpolated by me ("to bow down before another created being") reflects Zamakhshari's interpretation of this passage.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (38:76)

I.e., out of something non-corporeal and, therefore (in the view of Iblis), superior to the "clay" out of which man has been created. Inasmuch as "fire" is a symbol of passion, the above "saying" of Iblis contains, I believe, a subtle allusion to the Quranic concept of the "satanic forces" (shayatin) active within man's own heart: forces engendered by uncontrolled passions and love of self, symbolized by the preceding characterization of Iblis, the foremost of the shayatin, as "one of those who think only of themselves as high" (min al-alin).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (38:81)

The grant of "respite" to Iblis implies that he would have the power to tempt man until the end of time.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (38:84)

Cf. 15:41 - "This is, with Me, a straight way"- and the corresponding note 31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (38:86)

The expression mutakallif denotes, primarily, "a person who takes too much upon himself", be it in action or in feeling; hence, a person who pretends to be more than he really is, or to feel what he does not really feel. In this instance, it indicates the Prophet's disclaimer of any "supernatural" status.

GOD does not guide such liars, disbelievers.
Shabbir Ahmed	39:3 Is it not to God alone that all sincere faith is due? And yet, those who take patrons besides Him say, "We worship them for no other reason than that they bring us nearer to God." God will judge between them (the clergy and the masses) concerning that wherein they differed (from the truth). Certainly, God does not grace with guidance anyone who is bent on lying to himself, stubbornly ingrate. ¹

Muhammad Asad	39:6 He has created you [all] out of one living entity, and out of it fashioned its mate; ⁷ and he has bestowed upon you four kinds of cattle of either sex; ⁸ [and] He creates you in your mothers' wombs, one act of creation after another, in threefold depths of darkness. ⁹ Thus is God, your Sustainer: unto Him belongs all dominion: there is no deity save Him: how, then, can you lose sight of the truth? ¹⁰
Rashad Khalifa	39:6 He created you from one person, then created from him his mate. He sent down to you eight kinds of livestock. He creates you in your mothers' bellies, creation after creation, in trimesters of darkness. Such is GOD your Lord. To Him belongs all sovereignty. There is no other god beside Him. How could you deviate?
Shabbir Ahmed	39:6 He has created you all out of one living entity (from a single life cell) - and fashioned similarly its mate, male and female (6:99). And He has bestowed upon you livestock of eight kinds in pairs. (Sheep, goat, camel, cow - male and female, the common permissible livestock 6:144-146). He creates you in the bellies of your mothers, creation after creation, in threefold depths of darkness (the abdominal wall, the uterine wall and the embryonic sac). Such is God, your Lord! Muhammad Asad	39:7 If you are ingrate ¹¹ behold, God has no need of you; none the less, He does not approve of ingratitude in His servants: whereas, if you show gratitude, He approves it in you. And no bearer of burdens shall be made to bear another's burden. ¹² In time, unto your Sustainer you all must return, and then He will make you [truly] understand all that you were doing [in life]: for, verily, He has full knowledge of what is in the hearts [of men].
Rashad Khalifa	Believe For Your Own Good 39:7 If you disbelieve, GOD does not need anyone. But He dislikes to see His servants make the wrong decision. If you decide to be appreciative, He is pleased for you. No soul bears the sins of any other soul. Ultimately, to your Lord is your return, then He will inform you of everything you had done. He is fully aware of the innermost thoughts.

But then, when He grants him a blessing from Him, he forgets his previous imploring, and sets up equals with God, in order to mislead others from His path. Say: "Enjoy your rejection for a while; for you are of the dwellers of the Fire."
Muhammad Asad	39:8 NOW [thus it is:] when affliction befalls man, he is likely to cry out to his Sustainer, turning unto Him [for help]; ¹³ but as soon as He has bestowed upon him a boon by His grace, he forgets Him whom he invoked before, and claims that there are other powers that could rival God ¹⁴ - and thus leads [others] astray from His path. Say [unto him who sins in this way]: Enjoy thyself for a while in this thy denial of the truth; [yet,] verily, thou art of those who are destined for the fire!
Rashad Khalifa	39:8 When the human being is afflicted, he implores his Lord, sincerely devoted to Him. But as soon as He blesses him, he forgets his previous imploring, sets up idols to rank with GOD and to divert others from His path. Say, "Enjoy your disbelief temporarily; you have incurred the hellfire."
Shabbir Ahmed	39:8 When some trouble touches the humans, they call upon their Lord turning to Him in humility. But as soon as He bestows a blessing upon them from Himself, they forget what they called for before, and they choose 'rivals' to God, thus misleading others from His path. Say, "Enjoy your disbelief for a little while. You are among the companions of the fire." ³

The skins of those who reverence their Lord shiver from it, then their skins and their hearts soften up to the remembrance of God. Such is God's guidance; He guides with it whoever He wills. For whomever God misguides, then none can guide him. ⁶
The Monotheist Group	39:23 God has sent down the best narration, a Scripture that is similar with two paths. The skins of those who reverence their Lord shiver from it, then their skins and their hearts soften up to the remembrance of God. Such is God's guidance; He guides with it whoever He wills. And for whomever God misguides, then none can guide him.
Muhammad Asad	39:23 God bestows from on high ²⁷ the best of all teachings in the shape of a divine writ fully consistent within itself, repeating each statement [of the truth] in manifold forms ²⁸ [a divine writ] whereat shiver the skins of all who of their Sustainer stand in awe: [but] in the end their skins and their hearts do soften at the remembrance of [the grace of] God. Such is God's guidance: He guides therewith him that wills [to be guided] ²⁹ whereas he whom God lets go astray can never find any guide ³⁰

Rashad Khalifa	The Best Hadith 39:23 GOD has revealed herein the best Hadith; a book that is consistent, and points out both ways (to Heaven and Hell). The skins of those who reverence their Lord cringe therefrom, then their skins and their hearts soften up for GOD's message. Such is GOD's guidance; He bestows it upon whoever wills (to be guided). As for those sent astray by GOD, nothing can guide them.
Shabbir Ahmed	39:23 God has now revealed the best Hadith, a Book fully consistent within itself. It marks out both ways (to success and failure) repeating its messages in diverse forms. Herewith shiver the skins of those who have some idea of the glory of their Lord, and then, their skins and their hearts soften at God's reminder. This is the guidance of God, and with it He guides one who seeks guidance. Whereas one who follows a path that God has declared to be wrong, goes astray and he cannot find a guide. ⁶

Muhammad Asad	39:24 Could, then, one who shall have nothing but is [bare] face to protect him from the awful suffering [that will befall him] on Resurrection Day [be likened to the God-conscious]? ³¹ [On that Day,] the evildoers will be told: Taste [now] what you have earned [in life]!"
Rashad Khalifa	39:24 What is better than saving one's face from the terrible retribution on the Day of Resurrection? The transgressors will be told, "Taste the consequences of what you earned."

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (39:2)

See 39:11.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (39:3)

There is not much difference between the Meccan polytheists and modern polytheists who turned Islam into a limited corporation or limited liability partnership. Those who expect their prophets and saints to one day intercede on their behalf are setting up partners with God, even though they do not admit it (6:23). Also, see 2:48.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (39:5)

The verb yuKaWiRu (rotates, rolls around) used in the verse clearly indicates the roundness of the earth. See 21:33; 27:88; 36:40; 68:1; 79:30.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (39:11)

Decades and centuries after Muhammad, muslims deserted the Quran and gave up dedicating themselves to God alone. They started following man-made religions and sects concocted by the clerics and scholars, a partnership comprising God + prophet + his companions + the companions of his companions + sect imams + imams in a particular set + former scholars + later scholars and/or saints. See 29; 16:52; 39:2,14; 40:14,65; 98:5.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (39:18)

Knowing that those who abandoned the Quran would follow teachings called hadith, sunna, and ijma, God uses these words almost invariably with a negative connotation when they do not relate to the Quran. It is noteworthy, that the verse asking us to listen to different words does not use the word "hadith" but the word "qawl." God does not give even a single positive usage of hadith when it is used to denote human words. Isn't there a sign in this? See 33:38; 66:3. Also see: 6:110.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (39:23)

Mutashabih means "similar" or "multiple- meaning" (3:7). However, when it is used for the entire book, which also contains single-meaning words, mutashabih should be understood as 'similar' or 'consistent.' Some statements of the Quran have multiple meanings (mutashabih) and all the statements of the Quran are consistent (mutashabih). Like its references, the word mutashabih itself has multiple meanings.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (39:28)

See 43:3.

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (39:29)

Can a person who peacefully surrenders only to the Truth be the same as the one who surrenders to many contradictory authorities such as saints, imams, mujtahids, scholars, sheiks, hadith books, sectarian jurisprudence, fatwas?

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (39:44)

See 2:48.

Edip-Layth - End Note 10 (39:45)

The majority of the so-called Muslims, despite the testimony in 3:18, insist on adding Muhammad's name. This criterion exposes the fact that those who are not happy with uttering God's name alone, those who enjoy adding the names of Muhammad, Jesus, or any other creature, do not really acknowledge the hereafter (3:18; 17:46).

Edip-Layth - End Note 11 (39:53)

Associating partners with God (shirk), is a different category than sin (zanb); it is an unforgivable crime. See 4:48,116; Also, see 12:87; 15:56; 30:36; 41:49, and 39:10. The pronoun in "my servant" refers to God, since according to numerous verses only God can be the master. This sudden shift in pronouns is called iltifat (conversion, turning one's face to someone) in Arabic literature, which is defined as "the change of speech from one mode to another, for the sake of freshness and variety for the listener, to renew his interest, and to keep his mind from boredom and frustration, through having the one mode continuously at his ear." On this and other literary aspects of the Quran, I recommend Neal Robinson's book: Discovering The Qur'an: A Contemporary Approach To A Veiled Text (1996, SCM Press Ltd.). For other examples of iltifat, see 35:9; 69:41-47; 16:1-2; 39:15-16; 89:25-30; 20:113-114; 67:18-19; 5:44; 20:124; 75:1-3; 2:38; 11:37; 50:45; 1:2-5; 19:88; 52:17-19; 16:72; 45:35; 30:38; and 70:39-4; 17:1-3; 17:95; 39:53; 10:22.

See 39:23.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (39:3)

This relates not only to the worship of saints, angels and "deified" persons as such, but also to that of their symbolic representations (statues, pictures, relics, etc.) and, in the case of defunct human personalities, of their real or reputed tombs. Since all such practices are based on the worshipper's hope of "mediation" between himself and God, they obviously conflict with the concept of His omniscience and justice, and are, therefore - notwithstanding their widespread occurrence - utterly rejected by the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (39:3)

I.e., between those worshippers and the spiritual leaders who have led them astray (cf. 34:31-33).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (39:3)

Cf. 6:22-24 and the corresponding notes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (39:4)

The implication is this: Since God is almighty, He can have or do anything that He wills; and so, if He wanted, He could "take unto Himself a son" (which is an allusion to the Christian doctrine of Jesus as "the son of God"). Since, however, He is "limitless in His glory" - i.e., complete in His excellence and utterly remote from all imperfection - He is ipso facto remote from the incompleteness inherent in the need of, or desire for, progeny, which logically precludes the possibility of His having a "son". (Cf. the last sentence of 6:100 and the corresponding note 88.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (39:5)

See note 11 on the last but one sentence of 10:5.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (39:5)

See note 5 on 13:2.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (39:6)

See 4:1 and the corresponding note 1.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (39:6)

Lit., "eight [in] pairs", i.e., the male and the female of four kinds of cattle (sheep, goats, camels and bovine cattle). For an explanation of my rendering, see note 130 on 6:143-144, where the same kinds of domesticated cattle are spoken of in connection with certain meaningless, superstitious taboos of pre-Islamic times, whereas here they are mentioned as "bestowed upon you" by God, and therefore lawful. Beyond this, the mention of cattle in this context is meant to remind man that it is God who provides his sustenance and therefore, man is utterly dependent on Him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (39:6)

Lit., "by creation after creation, in three darknesses": an allusion to the successive stages of embryonic development, repeatedly spoken of in the Qur'an (cf. 22:5 and 23:12-14), and to the darkness of the womb, the membrane enveloping the embryo, and its pre-natal blindness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (39:6)

Lit., "how, then, are you turned away?" - i.e., from the truth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (39:7)

Or: "If you deny the truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (39:7)

This statement occurs in the Qur'an five times in exactly the same formulation (apart from the above instance, in 6:164, 17:15, 35:18 and 53:38 - this last being the earliest in the chronology of revelation). In the present instance, it contains an allusion to (and rejection of) the Christian doctrine of "vicarious atonement" and, indirectly, to the worship of saints, etc., spoken of in verse 3 above and referred to in the corresponding note above. (See also note 31 on 53:38.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (39:8)

Lit., "he cries out", i.e., instinctively, and as a rule.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (39:8)

Lit., "and gives God compeers (andad, sing. nidd)". Cf. the last sentence of 2:22 and the corresponding note 13.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (39:9)

Alternatively, the above verse could be rendered thus: "Is, perchance, he who worships hoping for his Sustainer's grace, [equal to one who denies the truth]?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (39:10)

This interpolation is justified by the fact that the possessive pronoun in the subsequent phrase "servants of Mine" obviously relates to God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (39:10)

I.e., there is always a possibility of doing good and "migrating from evil unto God" - which is the permanent, spiritual connotation of the concept of hijrah implied here: see note 124 on 4:97.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (39:15)

Implying that on Resurrection Day they will be irretrievably separated from all whom they had loved, and all who had been close to them in this world. The "loss of one's own self" signifies, I think, the destruction of one's true identity and uniqueness as a human being, which is described in the next clause as "the most obvious loss" that man may be made to suffer in the life to come.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (39:16)

As in many other instances, the Qur'an alludes in this phrase to the allegorical nature as well as to the real purpose of all descriptions of the suffering which awaits the sinners in the hereafter; cf. 74:35-36 - "that [hell-fire] is indeed one of the great [forewarnings]: a warning to mortal man".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (39:17)

For my rendering of at-taghut as "powers of evil", see surah 2 note 250. In the present context, this term apparently circumscribes the seductive force of certain evil ambitions or desires - like striving after power for its own sake, acquisition of wealth by exploiting one's fellow-beings, social advancement by all manner of immoral means, and so forth - any of which may cause man to lose all spiritual orientation, and to be enslaved by his passions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (39:17)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (39:18)

According to Razi, this describes people who examine every religious proposition (in the widest sense of this term) in the light of their own reason, accepting that which their mind finds to be valid or possible, and rejecting all that does not measure up to the test of reason. In Razi's words, the above verse expresses "a praise and commendation of following the evidence supplied by one's reason (hujjat al-aql), and of reaching one's conclusions in accordance with [the results of] critical examination (nazar) and logical inference (istidlal)." A somewhat similar view is advanced, albeit in simpler terms, by Tabari.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (39:19)

This, to my mind, is the meaning of the prefix fa in fa-man - stressing, by implication, the contrast between the glad tiding given to those who have attained to faith and the suffering which awaits those "who shall have lost their own selves" through sinning (verses 15-16).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (39:19)

In view of the repeated Quranic statements that God always accepts a sinner's sincere repentance, provided it is proffered before the hour of death, His ineluctable "sentence of suffering" obviously relates to such as die without repentance, and hence find themselves, as it were, "already in the fire".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (39:20)

Lit., "But" (lakin), indicating a return to the theme of verses 17-18.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (39:21)

As in many other instances, the above Quranic reference to the endless transformations and the miraculous cycle of life and death in all nature serves to emphasize God's almightiness and, specifically, His power to resurrect the dead - thus alluding, indirectly, to the statement at the end of the preceding verse that "never does God fail to fulfill His promise".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (39:23)

Lit., "has been bestowing from on high", i.e., step by step. The verbal form nazzala indicates both gradualness and continuity in the process of divine revelation and may, therefore, be appropriately rendered by the use of the present tense.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (39:23)

This is the most acceptable meaning, in this context, of the term mathani (pl. of mathna), as explained by Zamakhshari in his commentary on the above verse. Another possible meaning, preferred by Razi, is "pairing its statements", i.e., referring to the polarity stressed in all Quranic teachings (e.g., command and prohibition, duties and rights, reward and punishment, paradise and hell, light and darkness, the general and the specific, and so forth). As regards the inner consistency of the Qur'an, see also 4:82 and 25:32, as well as the corresponding notes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (39:23)

Or: "He guides therewith whomever He wills", either of these two formulations being syntactically correct.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (39:23)

See note 4 on 14:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (39:24)

Lit., "who will protect himself with his face": an idiomatic phrase implying that the person concerned has nothing whatever with which to protect himself.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (39:26)

Cf. 16:26, which contains the additional sentence, "God visited with destruction all that they had ever built ", etc., which explains the present reference to their suffering and ignominy "in the life of this world".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (39:27)

As in many other passages of the Qur'an, the use of the term "parable" (mathal) immediately or shortly after a description of men's condition - whether good or bad - in the hereafter is meant to remind us that all such descriptions relate to something that is "beyond the reach of a created being's perception" (al-ghayb), and cannot, therefore, be conveyed to man otherwise than by means of allegories or parables expressed in terms of human experience and therefore accessible, in a general sense, to human imagination.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (39:28)

Lit., "without any deviousness (iwaj)", i.e., which could obscure its meaning: see note 1 on 18:1, where this term occurs in a slightly different phrasing. As regards the stress on the formulation of this divine writ "in the Arabic tongue", see 12:2, 13:37, 14:4 and 41:44, as well as the corresponding notes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (39:29)

Lit., "with regard to whom there are [several] partners (shuraka')", i.e., as masters: a metaphor for belief in a plurality of divine powers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (39:29)

The term mathal, which is usually rendered by me as "parable" (e.g., at the beginning of this verse as well as in verse 27), primarily denotes a "likeness", i.e., of one thing to another; but sometimes it is used tropically as a synonym for sifah (the "quality", "intrinsic attribute" or "nature" of a thing) or halah (its "state" or "condition"). In the present instance, the last mentioned of these meanings is most appropriate, inasmuch as it alludes to man's condition arising from either of two contrasting attitudes: a belief in God's transcendental oneness and uniqueness, on the one hand, and a readiness to ascribe divine powers and qualities to a variety of created beings or supposed "incarnations" of God, on the other.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (39:32)

In this instance, the "inventing of lies about God" alludes to the attribution of a share in His divinity to anyone or anything beside Him, whether it be a belief in a plurality of deities, or in an imaginary "incarnation" of God in human form, or in saints allegedly endowed with semi-divine powers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (39:32)

Lit., "Is not in hell an abode, etc.: a rhetorical question indicating, firstly, that otherworldly suffering is the unavoidable destiny -symbolically, "an abode" - of all such sinners; and, secondly, that in the concept and picture of "hell" we are given an allegory of that self-caused suffering.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (39:36)

Or: "instead of Him". This relates not merely to false deities, but also to saints alive or dead, and even to certain abstract concepts which the popular mind endows with charismatic qualities - like wealth, power, social status, national or racial pre-eminence, the idea of man's "self- sufficiency", etc. - and, finally, to all false values which are allowed to dominate man's thoughts and desires. The godless always stress the supposed necessity of paying attention to all these imaginary forces and values, and frighten themselves and their fellow-men by the thought that a neglect to do so might have evil consequences in their practical life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (39:38)

For this rendering of la'in, see surah 11 note 11.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (39:38)

See note 23 on 31:25.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (39:40)

Lit., "suffering (adhab) that will disgrace him": implying that surrender to false values inevitably leads to man's spiritual decay and, if persisted in by many, to social catastrophes and widespread suffering.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (39:41)

Or: "thou art not responsible for their conduct" (see note 4 on 17:2).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (39:42)

According to Razi, this passage connects allegorically with the preceding - the light of guidance being likened to life, and man's going astray, to death or, if it is not permanent, to death-like sleep followed by awakening. Beyond this, however, we have here a reminder - in tune with the subsequent passages - of God's almightiness, and especially of His exclusive power to create and to withdraw life. As to the operative verb yatawaffa, it primarily denotes "He takes [something] away in full"; and because death is characterized by a disappearance of all vital impulses (the "soul") from the once-living body - their being "taken away in full", as it were - this form of the verb has been used tropically, since time immemorial, in the sense of "causing to die", and (in its intransitive form) "dying" or (as a noun) "death": a usage invariably adhered to in the Qur'an. The traditional likening of sleep to death is due to the fact that in both cases the body appears to be devoid of consciousness, partially and temporarily in the former case, and completely and permanently in the latter. (The popular translation of anfas - p1. of nafs - as "souls" is certainly inappropriate in the above context, since, according to the fundamental teaching of the Qur'an, man's soul does not "die" at the time of his bodily death but, on the contrary, lives on indefinitely. Hence, the term anfas must be rendered here as "human beings".)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (39:43)

This is the meaning of the particle am in this context (Zamakhshari, implying that despite all the evidence of God's almightiness, many people tend to disregard it).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (39:43)

I.e., intercessors who could act as such independently of God's permission - an assumption which the Qur'an categorically denies (see surah 10 note 7).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (39:43)

A reference to the adoration of dead saints or their tombs or relics, as well as of inanimate representations of saints, of imaginary deities, etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (39:44)

Regarding the problem of intercession as such, see note 7 on 10:3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (39:45)

Since cognition of God must have a sense of moral responsibility as its correlate, the godless shrink from it, and joyfully turn to the "worship" - real or metaphoric - of imaginary powers which make no such moral demand.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (39:46)

See surah 6 note 65.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (39:47)

Lit., "and the like of it with it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (39:47)

Cf. 3:91 and the corresponding note 71.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (39:47)

Lit., "will have become obvious to them (bada lahum) from God" - i.e., the fact that man's attitudes and actions in this world determine his state and further development in the hereafter: in other words, that happiness or suffering in the life to come (allegorically described as "paradise" or 'hell", and "reward" or "chastisement") are but natural consequences of the use which man makes in this life of his capabilities, endowments and opportunities.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (39:48)

Lit., "that which they were wont to deride will enfold them" or "will have enfolded them": i.e., the reality of life after death and of the spiritual truths preached by God's prophets will overwhelm them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (39:49)

Lit., "knowledge" - i.e., "my prosperity is due to my own ability and shrewdness": see the first sentence of 28:78 and the corresponding note. But whereas there this "saying" or thought is attributed to the legendary Qarun, in the present instance - which is by far the earlier in the chronology of Quranic revelation - it is said to be characteristic of man as such (see, e.g., 7:189-190, where this tendency is referred to in connection with the experience of parenthood).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (39:51)

Lit., "those who are bent on wrongdoing (alladhina zalamu) from among these here".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (39:53)

See note 16 on the opening words of verse 10 of this surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (39:53)

Sc., "whenever the sinner repents and turns to Him": cf., for instance, 6:54 "Your Sustainer has willed upon Himself the law of grace and mercy - so that if any of you does a bad deed out of ignorance, and thereafter repents and lives righteously, He shall be [found] much-forgiving, a dispenser of grace"; or 4:110 - "he who does evil or [otherwise] sins against himself, and thereafter prays God to forgive him, shall find God much-forgiving, a dispenser of grace".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (39:54)

Cf. 4:18 - "repentance shall not be accepted from those who do evil deeds until their dying hour, and then say, 'Behold, I now repent'; nor from those who die as deniers of the truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (39:56)

Whenever there is no clear indication that the term nafs has another meaning, it signifies a "human being"; hence, the personal pronouns relating to this term (which is feminine in Arabic) are masculine in my rendering.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (39:58)

Cf. 2:167 and 26:102, as well as 6:27-28 and the corresponding note 19.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (39:60)

The phrase iswadda wajhuhu (lit., "his face became black" or "dark") is used idiomatically to describe a face expressive of grief or ignominy (cf. 16:58), just as its opposite, ibyadda wajhuhu (lit., "his face became white" or "shining") describes a countenance expressive of happiness or justified pride: cf. 2:106 - "some faces will shine [with happiness] and some faces will be dark [with grief]". Apart from this, both phrases have also a tropical significance, namely, "he became [or "felt"] disgraced", resp. "honoured". As regards the "inventing of lies about God" spoken of in this verse, see note 37 on verse 32 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (39:60)

See note 38 on the last sentence of verse 32 of this surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (39:62)

For the meaning of the term wakil in this context, see note 4 on 17:2.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (39:65)

I.e., "it has been conveyed to thee through the divine messages revealed to the prophets". The assumption of almost all the classical commentators that this passage is addressed to Muhammad does not make much sense in view of God's knowledge that neither he nor any of the prophets who came before him would ever commit the deadly sin (referred to in the sequence) of "ascribing divine powers to aught beside God". On the other hand, the above reminder becomes very cogent and relevant as soon as it is conceived as being addressed to man in general, irrespective of time and circumstance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (39:67)

I.e., the whole universe is as nothing before Him: for this specific allegory of God's almightiness, see 21:104. There are many instances, in the Qur'an as well as in authentic ahadith, of the clearly metaphorical use of the term "hand" in allusions to God's absolute power and dominion. The particular reference, in the above, to the Day of Resurrection is due to the fact that it will be only on his own resurrection that a human being shall fully grasp the concept of God's almightiness, referred to in the subsequent words, "limitless is He in His glory" (subhanahu).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (39:68)

As is evident from 27:89, the above is an allusion to the unbroken spiritual life in this world - and, therefore, happiness in the hereafter - of those who have attained to faith and have done righteous deeds. Cf. 21:103 - "the supreme awesomeness [of the Day of Resurrection] will cause them no grief".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (39:68)

Cf. 37:19.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (39:69)

I.e., with a clear revelation of His will. See also 14:48, where it is stated that on Resurrection Day "the earth shall be changed into another earth, as shall be the heavens". A further allusion to this transformation (and not annihilation) of the universe is found in 20:105-107.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 70 (39:69)

Cf. 17:13-14 (and the corresponding note 18): also 18:49.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 71 (39:69)

See 4:41 and the corresponding note 52. Accordingly, the above phrase may well have the meaning of "all the prophets as witnesses", i.e., for or against those to whom they conveyed God's message. In all probability, however, the term shuhada (or ashhad in 40:51) signifies here - as its singular shahid obviously does in 50:21 - man's newly-awakened consciousness, which will compel him to bear witness against himself on Judgment Day (cf. 6:130, 17:14, 24:24, 36:65, 41:20 ff.).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 72 (39:70)

Cf. 99:7-8, "he who shall have done an atom's weight of good, shall behold it; and he who shall have done an atom's weight of evil, shall behold it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 73 (39:71)

I.e., as an ineluctable consequence of their unrepented sinning.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 74 (39:72)

Sc., "and therefore refused to submit to the guidance offered them by God's apostles": cf. 96:6-7 - "man becomes grossly overweening whenever he believes himself to be self-sufficient". See also 16:22 and the corresponding note 15.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 75 (39:73)

Lit., "and its gates have [or "will have"] been opened", i.e., before their arrival, as indicated by the particle wa (lit., "and"), which in this case denotes precedence in time (Zamakhshari). Cf. in this connection 38:50 - "gardens of perpetual bliss, with gates wide-open to them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 76 (39:74)

Lit., "has made us heirs to this land", i.e., of paradise. According to all the classical commentators, the concept of "heritage" is used here metaphorically, to denote the rightful due, or portion, of the blessed. The term ard (lit., "earth" or "land") has also - especially in poetry - the connotation of "anything that is spread" (cf. Lane I, 48): hence my rendering of it, in the above context, as "expanse".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 77 (39:75)

Whenever the term al-arsh ("the throne [of God]") occurs in the Qur'an, it is used as a metaphor for

His absolute dominion over all that exists: hence my rendering, "the throne of [God's] almightiness". (See also 7:54 and the corresponding note 43.) The mention of the "angels surrounding" it has, obviously, a metaphorical meaning: see note 4 on 40:7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 78 (39:75)

Lit., "it will be said".

Sayyeh = Causing imbalance in the lives of others. Unfortunately, terms such as 'Sayyeh', 'Zanb',

'Ithm' all are frequently translated as the vague term 'Sin'. Zanb = Tail = Trailing behind like the tail of an animal trails behind its body = Trailing behind in humanity. Ithm = Any action that depletes individual or communal energy. Likewise, Zulm is almost always rendered as wrongdoing or transgression, while it denotes displacing something from its rightful place. So, Zulm will carry a specific meaning according to the context. The terms such as Saalehaat, Birr, Khair, Hasanah, Taqwa are made to lose their powerful specific impact through vague term 'Righteousness'. Saalehaat = Actions that increase the capabilities of a person or the society = Setting things right = Helping others. Birr = Works that lead to exponential growth of the 'self' = Creating room for advancement of all. Khair = A deed or act that endows a person and others with true inner happiness. Taqwa = Journeying through life in security = Being observant

Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 1 (39:5)

This verse clearly informs us that the earth is round. The Arabic for ``He rolls" (Yukawwir) is derived from the Arabic word for ``ball" (Kurah). Since the Earth is not exactly round, a specific reference to its shape is given in 79:30. The Quran is replete with scientific information that became known to us centuries after the revelation of the Quran. See Appendix 20.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 2 (39:45)

Despite the clear commandment in 3:18 that the First Pillar of Islam is proclaiming: ``Ash-hadu An La Elaha Ella Allah (there is no other god beside God)," the majority of ``Muslims" insist upon adding the name of Muhammad. This Greatest Criterion alerts us that rejoicing in adding the name of Muhammad, or any other name, exposes disbelief in the Hereafter. See also Footnote 17:46.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 3 (39:67)

Our universe, with its billion galaxies, a billion trillion stars, uncountable decillions of heavenly bodies, spanning many billions of light-years, is the smallest and innermost of seven universes. This incomprehensible vastness of the seven universes is within God's hand. Such is the greatness of God. See Appendix 6.

Edip-Layth	Ignoring God's Signs in the Scripture and Nature 40:56 Surely, those who dispute about God's signs without any authority given to them, there is nothing but arrogance in their chests, which they do not perceive. Therefore, seek refuge in God; He is the Hearer, the Seer.
The Monotheist Group	40:56 Surely, those who dispute about God's revelations without any authority given to them, there is nothing but arrogance in their chests, which they do not perceive. Therefore, seek refuge in God; He is the Hearer, the Seer.
Muhammad Asad	40:56 Behold, as for those who call God's messages in question without having any evidence therefore ³⁹ in their hearts is nothing but overweening self-conceit, which they will never be able to satisfy: ⁴⁰ seek thou, then, refuge with God - for, verily, He alone is all-hearing, all-seeing!
Rashad Khalifa	40:56 Surely, those who argue against GOD's revelations without proof are exposing the arrogance that is hidden inside their chests, and they are not even aware of it. Therefore, seek refuge in GOD; He is the Hearer, the Seer.
Shabbir Ahmed	40:56 Those who dispute the messages of God without any basis, are displaying the arrogance that is hidden in their chests and they do not even perceive it. Seek refuge, then, with God (to dispel their treacheries). Certainly, He is the Hearer, the Seer. ¹⁹

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (40:1)

H8M40. This two-letter/number combination initializes seven chapters from chapter 40 to chapter 46 and participates in the mathematical system of the Quran. Furthermore, the frequencies of these letters in these seven chapters creates a special pattern built according to a specific formula. Twenty- nine chapters of the Quran start with various combinations of letters/numbers and their frequencies in those chapters demonstrate an amazing interlocking mathematical pattern based on the number 19. The fact that the book does not lose its literal quality while also being embedded with a mathematical structure based on a network of letters, words, verses, and chapters, is one of the greatest evidences for the authenticity of the Quran. See 2:1; 74:1-56.

Pharaoh, Haman, and Qarun, representing the political, military, capitalist powers, respectively, united to fight against God's message. This oligarchy used magicians (religious leaders) to continue their corrupt and exploitative system (7:112-116). 040:028-38 These eleven verses have prophetic fulfillment in our times. The Arabic text contains supportive clues for those who witnessed the fulfillment of the prophecy. Unappreciative people, who will try to cover the clear prophecies, will resort to Pharaoh's statement. The prophetic nature of these verses is highlighted by the statement of the monotheist in verse 40:44. Verses 40:78-85 also have multiple references. See 3:81; 40:44,78-85; 72:24-28; 74:1-56.

Similarly, Jews rejected John the Baptist and Jesus, and Christians rejected Muhammad. 040:060 God is our Lord, the Creator, Designer, and the Programmer of our body and mind. Seeking God's help and approval, including for material things, creates a connection between us. Continuous contact with the source of life and wisdom, updates our system program, thereby protecting us from the harms of diabolic viruses.

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (40:78)

Verse 40:34 informs us about people's tendency to consider their idolized messenger to be the last messenger. Those who close their minds and follow convention rather than reason and facts, react negatively to a "new" message delivered by a messenger (38:1-15; 23:44). This verse informs us that there were even many more messengers before Muhammad that the Quran did not mention by name. For instance, after a careful study of Plato's work about Socrates, one may infer that Socrates was a messenger of God to the Athenian people, who criticized their polytheistic religion and superstitions. Since God sent messengers to every nation, there must be many messengers from among the Chinese, Japanese, Hindi, Malay, etc. This verse also informs us that no messenger can come up with a miracle without God's permission. Unveiling the specifically hidden miracle of the Quran also cannot be done without God's special permission. (10:47; 16:36; 35:24; 40:28-44; and 74:30-35).

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (40:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (40:5)

Cf. 38:12-14, where some of those who were "leagued together" (al-ahzab) are enumerated; also verses 30 ff. of this surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (40:5)

Lit., "each community schemed against their apostle".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (40:7)

Lit, "around it": cf. Zamakhshari's explanation of the expression hawlaha occurring in 27: 8 in the sense of "near it". In his commentary on the verse which we are now considering, Baydawi states explicitly that the "bearing" of God's throne of almightiness (al-arsh - see note 43 on 7:54) must be understood in a metaphorical sense: "Their carrying it and surrounding it [or "being near it"] is a metaphor of their being mindful of it and acting in accordance therewith (majaz an hifzihim wa-tadbirihim lahu), or a metonym (kinayah) for their closeness to the Lord of the Throne, their dignity in His sight, and their being instrumental in the realization of His will." My rendering of the above verse reflects Baydawi's interpretation. As regards the beings which are said to be close to the throne of God's almightiness, most of the classical commentators - obviously basing their view on the symbolic image of "the angels surrounding the throne of [God's] almightiness" on the Day of Judgment (39:75) - think in this instance, too, exclusively of angels. But whereas it cannot be denied that the present verse refers also to angels, it does not follow that it refers exclusively to them. In its abstract connotation, the verb hamala frequently signifies "he bore [or "took upon himself"] the responsibility [for something]": and so it is evident that it applies here not only to angels but also to all human beings who are conscious of the tremendous implications of the concept of God's almightiness, and hence feel morally responsible for translating this consciousness into the reality of their own and their fellow-beings' lives.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (40:8)

See note 45 on 38:50.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (40:10)

Lit., "they will be called" or "summoned".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (40:10)

I.e., "on realizing, belatedly, your past sinfulness".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (40:10)

Since it is impossible to attribute to God a purely human emotion, "God's loathing" of those sinners is obviously a metonym for His rejection of them (Razi), similar to the metonymic use of the expression "God's wrath (ghadab)" in the sense of His condemnation (see first sentence of note 4 on 1:7).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (40:11)

I.e., "Thou hast brought us to life on earth, and then hast caused us to die; thereupon Thou hast resurrected us, and now hast condemned us to spiritual death in consequence of our willful spiritual blindness on earth." But now that we have acknowledged our sins, is there any way out [of this second death]?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (40:12)

An answer to the sinners' question at the end of the preceding verse may be found in the following extremely well-authenticated, parabolic saying of the Prophet: "[On the Day of Judgment,] those who deserve paradise will enter paradise, and those who deserve the fire, the fire. Thereupon God, the Sublimely Exalted, will say, 'Take out [of the fire] everyone in whose heart there was as much of faith [or, in some versions, "as much of good"] as a grain of mustard seed!' And so they will be taken out of it, already blackened, and will be thrown into the River of Life; and then they will come to life [lit., 'sprout'] as a herb sprouts by the side of a stream: and didst thou not see how it comes out, yellow and budding?" (Bukhari, on the authority of Abu Sa'id al-Khudri, in Kitab al-iman and Kitab Bad al-Khalq; also Muslim, Nasa'i and Ibn Hanbal.) The characterization as "yellow and budding" - i.e., tender and of light colour - indicates the freshness of new life in the pardoned sinner. This, of course, has nothing to do with the sinners' futile and meaningless request on Judgment Day to be given a "second chance" on earth (Cf. 6:27-28 or 32:12). See also last but one sentence of 6:128 and the corresponding note 114.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (40:15)

Lit., "He of the throne of almightiness". For the meaning of the term arsh, see note 43 on 7:54.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (40:15)

Lit., "the Day of the Meeting". For my rendering of ar-ruh as "inspiration", see note 2 on 16:2, as well as note 71 on 2:87.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (40:18)

Regarding the problem of "intercession" (shafa'ah) and its meaning in the Qur'an, see note 7 on 10:3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (40:19)

God's omniscience is shown here as the reason why there can be no "intercession" with Him in the commonly accepted sense of this term (cf. surah 10 note 27).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (40:20)

Cf. the parable of the believer in 36:20-27 and, in particular, the corresponding note 15.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (40:24)

As regards Qarun, who is said to have been a follower - and subsequently an opponent - of Moses, see 28:76 ff., as well as the corresponding note 84. For a discussion of the name "Haman", see note 6 on 28:6.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (40:25)

Lit., "those who have come to believe with him".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (40:26)

My interpolation of the word "alleged" is necessitated by the obvious sarcasm of Pharaoh's remark.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (40:28)

Lit., "a liar". As regards my rendering of musrif as "one who wastes [or "has wasted"] his own self", see note 21 on the last sentence of 10:12. Thus, the anonymous believer spoken of here argues that the message brought by Moses is so convincing that, by itself, it is a proof of his not being "one who wastes his own self" - i.e., destroys himself spiritually - by a spurious claim to divine inspiration.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (40:28)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (40:29)

Thus alluding to the reasons underlying his intention to kill Moses, expressed in verse 26.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (40:31)

I.e., those sinners were not wronged by what befell them in this world: they had deserved it. The next two verses refer to the Day of Judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (40:33)

See note 152 on 7:186 and note 4 on 14:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (40:34)

Thus not only refusing to acknowledge Joseph's prophethood, but also denying the possibility of any prophet being sent by God (Zamakhshari). It would seem that Joseph had been accepted in Egypt as a prophet only by the ruling class, the Hyksos, who were of Arab origin, spoke a language closely related to Hebrew (cf. surah 12 note 44), and were, therefore, emotionally and culturally predisposed towards the spirit of Joseph's mission, while the rest of the population was and remained hostile to the faith preached by him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (40:35)

Lit., "without any authority [or "evidence"] having come to them": i.e., without having any cogent evidence that would support their "denial" of the fact of revelation. The verb jadala primarily denotes "he argued"; followed by the particle fi ("with regard to" or "about") it has the meaning of "contesting" the truth of something, or "calling it in question".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (40:35)

Lit., "on the heart of every arrogant, self-exalting [person]". For an explanation of God's "sealing" an inveterate sinner's heart, see note 7 on 2:7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (40:37)

See surah 28 notes 6 and 37.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (40:40)

I.e., beyond any earthly imagination. The concept of rizq (expressed in the verb yurzaqun) has here its full significance of all that is good and of benefit to a living being, comprising things material as well as intellectual and spiritual; hence my rendering of yurzaqun (lit., "they will be given sustenance") as "they shall be blest with good".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (40:41)

Lit., "what is the matter with me": an expression of astonishment at the incongruity of the two attitudes referred to in the sequence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (40:42)

I.e., because there is no reality whatsoever in those supposedly "divine" beings or forces (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (40:46)

I.e., of which they had been warned, day-in and day-out, by prophets and believers like the one spoken of in this passage.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (40:47)

Cf. 14:21 and the corresponding notes 28 and 29.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (40:49)

I.e., the angelic forces that are to watch over the suffering of the sinners in the hereafter: perhaps an allegory of the belated awakening of the latter's conscience.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (40:50)

According to the classical commentators, this answer implies no more than a refusal on the part of the "keepers of hell" to intercede for the doomed sinners, telling them, as it were, "Pray yourselves, if you can." It seems to me, however, that we have here an indirect allusion to the sinners' erstwhile, blasphemous devotion to false objects of worship and false values - the meaning being, "Pray now to those imaginary powers to which you were wont to ascribe a share in God's divinity, and see whether they can help you!" This interpretation finds support in the next sentence, which speaks of the delusion (dalal) inherent in the prayers of "those who deny the truth", i.e., during their life on earth - for, obviously, on the Day of Judgment all such delusions will have disappeared.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (40:51)

See note 71 on 39:69.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (40:52)

Lit., "the evil of the [otherworldly] abode". As regards the term la'nah, its primary significance is "estrangement" or "rejection"; in Quranic terminology it denotes "rejection from all that is good" (Lisan al-Arab) and, specifically, "estrangement from God's grace" (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (40:54)

Sc., "and thus, too, have We bestowed Our revelation upon Muhammad". This connects with the opening words of verse 51, "We shall indeed succour Our apostles and those who have attained to faith", thus explaining the purport of the preceding story of the believer who stood up for Moses. The reference to "those [of the children of Israel] who were endowed with insight" and therefore could benefit from the message of Moses, is undoubtedly meant to remind the followers of the Qur'an that this divine writ, too, is for "those who are endowed with insight" (ulu l-albab), for "people who think" (qawm yatafakkarun), and "people who use their reason" (qawm ya'qilun).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (40:55)

According to all classical commentators, the above passage is addressed in the first instance to the Prophet and, through him, to every believer. As regards the Prophet himself, see note 41 on the last sentence of 24:31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (40:56)

See note 25 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (40:56)

Lit., "which they will never [be able to] reach" or "fulfill". This is a reference to the conceit which makes many agnostics think that man is "self-sufficient" and that, therefore, there are no limits to what he may yet achieve, and no need to assume that he is responsible to a higher Power. Cf. in this connection 96:6-7, which is one of the earliest Quranic revelations: "Nay, verily, man becomes grossly overweening whenever he believes himself to be self-sufficient." And since this "self-sufficiency" is entirely illusory, those who build their world-view on it "will never be able to satisfy their overweening conceit". (Cf. also the reference to "arrogant, self-exalting hearts" in verse 35 above.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (40:57)

I.e., of the universe as a whole. By stressing the fact that man is only a small, insignificant part of the universe, the Qur'an points out the absurdity of the man-centred world-view alluded to in the preceding verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (40:59)

I.e., refuse to admit to themselves that the world as they know it could ever come to an end: which is another aspect of the "overweening conceit" spoken of in verse 56 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (40:60)

Cf. 2:186.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (40:61)

See note 77 on 27:86.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (40:62)

Sc., "O you who deny this truth!" For my above rendering of tu'fakun, see note 90 on the last sentence of 5:75.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (40:63)

see surah 29, note 45.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (40:64)

I.e., in accordance with the exigencies of human life. See also note 9 on the first sentence of 7:11 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (40:67)

See note 4 on 23:12.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (40:67)

Or: "a term known [only to Him]" - cf. 6:2 and the corresponding note 2.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (40:69)

Lit., "how they are turned away" - i.e., from the truth: in this case, from all the observable evidence of God's almightiness and creative activity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (40:70)

Since, as the Qur'an so often points out, the fundamental truths set forth in all divine revelations are the same, a rejection of the last of them amounts to a rejection of all the preceding ones.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (40:71)

For an explanation of the allegory of "shackles" and "chains", see note 13 on 13:5, note 44 on the last but one sentence of 34:33, and notes 6 and 7 on 36:8.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (40:72)

Thus Mujahid (as quoted by Tabari) explains the verb yusjarun. As regards my rendering of hamim as "burning despair", see surah 6, and note 62.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (40:74)

Lit., "we have not been invoking aforesaid any [real] thing": thus realizing, belatedly, the intrinsic nothingness of all those imaginary powers and values - including the belief in man's alleged self-sufficiency and greatness - to which they paid homage in life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (40:74)

I.e., by allowing them to pursue illusions and foolish fancies in consequence of their unwillingness to acknowledge the self-evident truth of God's existence and uniqueness and of man's utter dependence on Him. For a discussion of the problem of God's "letting" a sinner go astray, see note 4 on 14:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (40:77)

See the almost identical passage in 10:46, as well as the corresponding notes 66 and 67.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (40:78)

I.e., in the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (40:78)

See 6:109 - "Miracles are in the power of God alone" - and the corresponding note 94. Both passages (6:109 and the present one) relate to the futile demand of Muhammad's opponents to be shown a miracle in proof of the divine origin of the Qur'an - the implication being that it is not God's will to convince the deniers of the truth by means of what is commonly regarded as "miracles".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (40:78)

Lit., "when God's command comes, i.e., whether it be in this world or on the Day of Judgment: a reference to the retribution spoken of in verse 77 above.

Lit., "a need in your bosoms" [or "hearts"]: i.e., a genuine need.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 64 (40:83)

I.e., they were fully satisfied with their own empirically or speculatively acquired or inherited knowledge; and so, in their arrogant conviction that man is "self-sufficient" and, therefore, not in need of any guidance by a Power beyond the reach of human perception, they rejected whatever ethical and spiritual truths were offered them by the prophets.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 65 (40:83)

I.e., the idea of God's existence and inescapable judgment: see 6:10 and the corresponding note 9.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 66 (40:84)

I.e., the God-willed, catastrophic breakdown of their society and civilization in consequence of their persistent rejection of all spiritual values.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 67 (40:84)

This evidently includes their past belief in man's supposedly "unlimited possibilities" and the illusory conviction that one day he would achieve "mastery over nature".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 68 (40:85)

I.e., firstly, because this belated faith could not unmake a reality which had already come into being, and, secondly, because it could not contribute to their spiritual growth inasmuch as it was not an outcome of free choice but had been, rather, forced on them by the shock of an irreversible calamity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 69 (40:85)

The "way of God" (sunnat Allah) is the Quranic term for the totality of natural laws instituted by the Creator: in this case, the law that faith has no spiritual value unless it arises out of a genuine, inner enlightenment.

Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 1 (40:1)

The initials ``Ha Mim" occur in Suras 40-46. The total frequency of occurrence of the letters ``Ha" and ``Mim" in the seven suras is 2147, or 19x113 (Appendix 1).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note (40:11)

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 3 (40:34)

It is noteworthy that we find the name "Rashad" in the Arabic text precisely four verses ahead of the injunction against saying "the last messenger," and also four verses after it.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 4 (40:60)

Supplication, imploring God for anything, even material luxuries, is a form of worship. Hence the commandment to implore God whenever we have any need. An atheist will never implore God for anything.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note (40:60)

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 5 (40:64)

See Footnotes 15:20, 20:54, 25:2, and 35:12-13.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 6 (40:66)

The Arabic word ``Nahaa" used in this verse indicates the stopping of something that was going on. See for example the same word in 4:171. See also 93:7.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 7 (40:72)

Those who did not prepare themselves will suffer tremendously in the presence of God, on the Day of Judgment. They cannot stand the closeness to God due to lack of sufficient growth and development of their souls. I am using ``Inferno" to describe this particular situation(55:44). Preparation of the soul is accomplished by the rites decreed by God, such as the Contact Prayer.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 8 (40:78)

We learn from 17:45-46, 18:57, and 56:79 that the unbelievers have no access to the Quran; only the believers and the sincere seekers are permitted by God to understand it. The Quran's mathematical code, ``One of the great miracles"(74:30-35), was authorized by God, and revealed through His Messenger of the Covenant (Appendix 2)

Shabbir Ahmed -

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 1 (40:7)

This verse makes much use of allegories. 7:54, 27:8. 'Arsh = Throne = God's Throne of Almighty = Some idea of His glory = Supreme Control. Yahmiloon-al-'Arsh = Those who bear the Throne = They manifest God's glory = Keep absolute harmony in the Universe = Angels and humans that manifest the glory of God = Have conviction that the Divine System is a blessing for humanity = Show that the system of life on earth can be run as smoothly as the rest of the Universe = Carry out His commands = Strive to establish the Kingdom of God on earth. Hawlahu = Around it = Near it = Being mindful of God's will. Ghafarah = Protection = Helmet and armor = Forgiveness = Absolving imperfections = Protection against the detriment of faults. Taabu from Taubah = Those who repent = They make amends = Those who return to the right road. Jaheem = Insurmountable Barrier to development = Fire of regret = Blazing Fire

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 2 (40:9)

Sayyeh = Disrupting others' lives = Causing imbalance in the society = Faults = Transgressions

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 3 (40:10)

Kufr = Denying the truth = Concealing the truth = Ingratitude for guidance = Choosing to live in darkness

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 4 (40:11)

First death: In the worldly life. Second death: Lack of further progress in the Hereafter, which is mere survival in Hell. Most commentators lean toward ascribing the first death to the non-existence of human beings before being born into this world. But it is difficult to conceive of death before a person was even born. 2:28, 14:17, 20:74, 35:36, 44:56, 87:1213. The Qur'an vividly portrays life as a journey with the propensity of further evolution and progress even in the Hereafter

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 5 (40:12)

39:45

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 6 (40:15)

The Day when all of them meet together and meet their Lord. Rafiuddarajat and Zul'arsh carry double connotation in my opinion as rendered

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 7 (40:19)

Treachery of the eyes = See but not observe. Reporting hearsay as eyewitness. Failing to lower the gaze. Not using senses to full potential. Failing to learn from daily observation. Not using vision to develop the vision

God's omniscience described in the end explains why only He can be the Infallible Judge

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 9 (40:21)

30:9

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 10 (40:24)

28:6, 29:39. Saahir = Magician = Trickster = An eloquent, spellbinding speaker = A deceitful liar = One who stuns the intellect. Pharaoh, Hamaan and Qaroon (Korah) are the archetypes of tyranny, priesthood and wealth respectively. It is important to note from this verse that Moses was sent to all three elements of this 'unholy trinity'. From this infers the mutual dependence of the forces of tyranny, priesthood and hoarding. These three elements have always worked in concert against the forces of justice and equity. Hamaan was the chief priest as well as chief of Pharaoh's armies. The wealthy Qaroon belonged to the Israelites, the people of Moses. But he was Pharaoh's slave-driver. He represents Capitalism, pursuit of wealth with its associated inequities

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 11 (40:25)

4:88

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 14 (40:35)

40:56. According to Divine law, when someone sticks to false beliefs and persistently refuses to listen to the truth, one loses the ability to perceive reality. God assigns to Himself all that happens in the Universe. Humans, however, have free will to choose their course. For example, the 'sealing of heart' is a natural consequence of one's own actions. For Taba' and Khatam, See 2:7

The Monotheist Group	41:39 And from among His signs is that you see the land still, then, as soon as We send down the water upon it, it shakes and grows. Surely, the One who revived it can revive the dead. He is capable of all things.
Muhammad Asad	41:39 For among His signs is this: thou seest the earth lying desolate - and lo! when We send down water upon it, it stirs and swells [with life]! Verily, He who brings it to life can surely give life to the dead [of heart as well]: for, behold, He has the power to will anything. 34
Rashad Khalifa	41:39 Among His proofs is that you see the land still, then, as soon as we shower it with water, it vibrates with life. Surely, the One who revived it can revive the dead. He is Omnipotent.
Shabbir Ahmed	41:39 And among His signs is this: You see the earth barren. As soon as We send down water upon it, it thrills and vibrates with life. He Who revives it, certainly is the Reviver of the dead. For, He has power over all things. 15

The Monotheist Group	41:44 And had We made it a non-Arabic compilation, they would have said: "If only its verses were made clear!" Non-Arabic and Arabic, say: "For those who believe, it is a guide and healing. As for those who disbelieve, there is deafness in their ears, and they are blind to it. These will be called from a place far away."
Muhammad Asad	41:44 Now if We had willed this [divine writ] to be a discourse in a non-Arabic tongue, they [who now reject it] would surely have said, Why is it that its messages have not been spelled out clearly? 37 Why - [a message in] a non-Arabic tongue, and [its bearer] an Arab?" Say: Unto all who have attained to faith, this [divine writ] is a guidance and a source of health; but as for those who will not believe - in their ears is deafness, and so it remains obscure to them: they are [like people who are] being called from too far away. 38
Rashad Khalifa	Language is Irrelevant 41:44 If we made it a non-Arabic Quran they would have said, "Why did it come down in that language?" Whether it is Arabic or non-Arabic, say, "For those who believe, it is a guide and healing. Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (41:3)

H8M40. This combination of two letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. For the meaning of these letters, see 1:1; 2:1; 40:1; 13:38; 46:10; 74:1-56. Also, see 43:3 and 11:1.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (41:9)

Each "day" of creation represents a period of time. According to the Quran, time is relative (32:5; 70:4). While the creation of earth took two units of time, the creation and evolution of all conditions for and stages of life took four units. This temporal comparison highlights the importance of the ecological system on planet earth. The conjunction between fragments in this verse is Wa (and), thus implying not a sequence of separate events, but overlapping series of events. See 7:69; 25:59; 32:4; 50:38; 57:4. Though the Bible contains some of the original revelations, Ezra and other Jewish scholars inserted into it many of their misunderstandings, comments, desires and ignorance (2:59). The Biblical account of the creation of the universe does not match scientific evidence. For instance, Genesis 1:1-2 informs us that the first stage of the universe started with the creation of water. Another example of external inconsistency is the creation of plants on earth before the creation of the sun (Genesis 1:11-14). The order of creation in the Bible is given in detail in its first book, which partially contradicts modern scientific findings: First day, light and darkness (Genesis 1:3-5), Second day, atmosphere, and waters (Genesis 1:6-8), Third day, land and making it fruitful (Genesis 1:9-13), Fourth day, sun, moon, and stars (Genesis 1:14-19), Fifth day, birds, insects, and fishes (Genesis 1:20-23), Sixth day, land animals, and man (Genesis 1:24,28). The Bible also contains internal inconsistencies. For instance, a comparative reading of chapter 1 and chapter 2 of Genesis will show that, most likely, the two chapters were authored by at least two different people who had different ideas about how the universe was created. Only through scientific evidence, which supports the Quranic version of creation, can we sort out the discrepancies in the Bible. Trees were created before man was (Genesis 1:11-12,26-27) versus man was created before trees were (Genesis 2:4-9). Birds were created before man was (Genesis 1:11-12, 26-27) versus man was created before birds were (Genesis 2:7,19). Animals were created before man was (Genesis 1:24-27) versus man was created before animals were (Genesis 2:7,19).

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (41:11)

Time, space, matter, and everything in the universe, are muslims following the laws issued by their Creator. This verse also informs us about the early stage of the universe after the Big Bang (21:30).

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (41:37)

The verse does not say "before sun and moon," but "for/to sun and moon." We are commanded not to prostrate to the sun and moon, but only to God. The verse prohibits physical and mental prostration to others than God. See 16:49.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (41:40)

Knowing that polytheists would attempt to distort the message of the Quran, God warns them beforehand mentioning the perfect preservation of His message.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (41:41)

Zikr means, "message" and it is used in connection with the mathematical code of the Quran. See 38:1-8 and 74:30-31.

Edip-Layth - End Note (41:42)

Edip-Layth - End Note 8 (41:44)

The Quran should be translated to all world languages (26:198-200). Monotheists will get the clear divine message despite errors in translations, since they study comparatively by using their God- given critical thinking skills. Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (41:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (41:3)

See 12:2 and the corresponding note 3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (41:4)

The "people of [innate] knowledge" mentioned in the preceding verse are obviously those who understand the spiritual purport of this divine writ and, therefore, submit to its guidance: hence, it cannot be "most of them" who are referred to in the above phrase and in the next verse but, on the contrary, people who are devoid of such knowledge and to whom, in consequence, the Qur'an is meaningless. This elliptically implied differentiation - overlooked by almost all of the commentators (with perhaps the sole exception of Ibn Kathir) - can only be brought out by means of an interpolation at the beginning of the sentence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (41:5)

For this rendering of the term hijab, see note on the first sentence of 7:46 . See also 6:25 . The "saying" of those who turn away from the message of the Qur'an is, of course, figurative, describing only their attitude.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (41:6)

Cf. 6:50 and the corresponding note 38.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (41:7)

Belief in God's oneness and charitableness towards one's fellow-men are two cardinal demands of Islam. Conversely, a deliberate offence against either of these two demands amounts to a denial of man's responsibility before God and hence, by implication, of a continuation of life in the hereafter. (For my rendering of zakah, in this context, as "charity", see surah 2 note 34 . It is to be borne in mind that the application of this term to the obligatory tax incumbent on Muslims dates from the Medina period, whereas the present surah is a Meccan revelation.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (41:9)

For the above rendering of the term yawm (lit., "day"), as "aeon", see last third of note 43 on 7:54 . As in so many verses of the Qur'an which relate to cosmic events, the repeated mention of the "six aeons" during which the universe was created - "two" of which, according to the above verse, were taken by the evolution of the inorganic universe, including the earth - has a purely allegorical import: in this case, I believe, an indication that the universe did not exist "eternally" but had a definite beginning in time, and that it required a definite time-lapse to evolve to its present condition.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (41:9)

Lit., "do you give Him compeers (andad)?" For an explanation, see note 13 on 2:22 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (41:10)

I.e., in accordance with divine justice, and not with human concepts of "equity" or "need".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (41:10)

Almost all the classical commentators agree in that these "four aeons include the "two" mentioned in the preceding verse: hence my interpolation of the words "and all this He created". Together with the "two aeons of verse 12, the entire allegorical number comes to six.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (41:11)

Whenever the particle thumma is used, as in the above instance, to link parallel statements - i.e., statements not necessarily indicating a sequence in time - it has the function of a simple conjunction, and may be rendered as "and".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (41:11)

I.e., a gas - evidently hydrogen gas, which physicists regard as the primal element from which all material particles of the universe have evolved and still evolve. For the meaning of the term sama ("sky" or "skies" or "heaven") in its cosmic connotation, see note 20 on 2:29 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (41:11)

Explaining this passage, Zamakhshari observes: "The meaning of God's command to the skies and the earth to 'come', and their submission [to His command] is this: He willed their coming into being, and so they came to be as He willed them to be and this is the kind of metaphor (majaz) which is called 'allegory' (tamthil). Thus, the purport [of this passage] is but an illustration (taswir) of the effect of His almighty power on all that is willed [by Him], and nothing else." (It is obvious that Zamakhshari's reasoning is based on the oft-repeated Quranic statement, "When God wills a thing to be, He but says unto it, 'Be' - and it is.") Concluding his interpretation of the above passage, Zamakhshari adds: "If I am asked about the meaning of [the words] 'willingly or unwillingly', I say that it is a figurative expression (mathal) indicating that His almighty will must inevitably take effect."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (41:12)

I.e., a multiplicity of cosmic systems (cf. note 20 on 2:29).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (41:12)

Cf. 15:16-18 and the corresponding note 16 and 17; also 37:6 ff.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (41:13)

This connects with the opening sentence of verse 9 above: "Would you indeed deny Him who has created", etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (41:13)

See note 40 on 2:55.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (41:13)

For the story of these two ancient tribes, see 7:65-79 and the corresponding notes in particular 48 and 56; also 26:123-158.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (41:14)

Lit., "from between their hands and from behind them": i.e., reminding them of something that was known to them - namely, what happened to sinners like themselves who lived before their time - and warning them of what was bound to happen in the future to them, too, if they persisted in their denial of the truth (Al-Hasan al-Basri, as quoted by Zamakhshari). However, it is possible to understand the above phrase (which has been explained in note 247 on 2:255) in yet another, more direct way: God's message-bearers pointed out to those sinning communities something that should have been obvious to them (lit., "between their hands") - namely, their patently wrong attitude in their worldly, social concerns and moral concepts - as well as the unreasonableness of their denying something that was still beyond their ken (lit., "behind them"): namely, life after death and God's ultimate judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (41:14)

Cf. 6:8-9 and 15:7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (41:16)

See 69:6-8.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (41:24)

Sc., "unless God wills to relieve them": see the last paragraph of 6:128 and the corresponding note 114; also the hadith quoted in note 10 on 40:12.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (41:24)

Lit., "they will not be of those who are allowed to make amends": an allusion to the request of the doomed, on the Day of Judgment, to be granted a "second chance" on earth, and to God's refusal of this request (cf. 6:27-28 and 32:12).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (41:25)

Or: "soul-mates" (cf. 4:38). The verb qarana, from which the noun qarin is derived, signifies "he linked" or "intimately associated" or "yoked together [one thing with another]". Cf. 43:36 - "as for anyone who chooses to remain blind to the remembrance of the Most Gracious, to him We assign an [enduring] evil impulse [lit., "a Satan"], to become his other self".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (41:25)

Lit., "that which was between their hands and that which was behind them": i.e., their own evil impulses (which had become their "other selves", as it were) made alluring to them the unrestrained enjoyment, without any moral discrimination, of all the worldly attractions which lay open before them, causing them, at the same time, to dismiss as an illusion the idea of resurrection and of God's judgment - thus giving them a false sense of security with regard to something that was beyond their ken.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (41:25)

For this rendering - and the meaning - of the term jinn, see Appendix III.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (41:26)

This is an allusion to efforts aimed at discrediting the Qur'an by describing it as "invented" by Muhammad for his own - personal and political - ends, as a series of "misunderstood quotations" from earlier scriptures, as the result of "hallucinations", and so forth: all of which implies that the opponents of the Quranic message instinctively feel its force, realizing at the same time that it endangers their self-complacent, materialistic outlook on life and ought, therefore, to be combated. This explains the statement, at the end of verse 28, that they "knowingly reject" God's messages.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (41:28)

For the above rendering of the verb jahada, see surah 29 note 45.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (41:29)

See 6:112 - "against every prophet We have set up as enemies the evil forces (shayatin) from among humans as well as from among invisible beings" - and the corresponding note 98.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (41:29)

Cf. 7:38 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (41:34)

See note 44 on 13:22 . In the present instance, the injunction to "repel [evil] with something that is better" relates to scurrilous objections to, and hostile criticism of, the Qur'an. The whole of this passage (verses 33 ff.) connects with verse 26.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (41:36)

I.e., He alone sees what is in the hearts of men, and He alone understands the innermost motivations, of which they themselves are unconscious, of those who criticize the Qur'an adversely. See 7:199-200 and the corresponding notes.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (41:37)

This, according to Razi, connects with the phrase "calling [one's fellow-men] unto God" in verse 33 above. God is the sole cause and source of all that exists; and whatever exists is but a wondrous sign of His creative power. Hence, it is a blasphemy - apart from being unreasonable - to ascribe real power (which is the meaning of "adoration" in this context) to anything created, whether it be a concrete phenomenon, or an abstract force of nature, or a set of circumstances, or even an idea.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (41:39)

Although the allusion to the reviving earth often occurs in the Qur'an as a parable of man's ultimate resurrection, in the present context (and in tune with the entire passage comprising verses 33-39) it appears to be an illustration of God's power to bestow spiritual life upon hearts that have hitherto remained closed to the truth of His existence and omnipotence. Hence, it implies a call to the believer never to abandon the hope that "those who deny the truth" may one day grasp the truth of the Quranic message.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (41:42)

Lit., "neither from between its hands, nor from behind it", i.e., it cannot be openly changed by means of additions or omissions (Razi), and neither surreptitiously, by hostile or deliberately confusing interpretations. The above is one of the Quranic passages on which the great commentator Abu Muslim al-Isfahani (as quoted by Razi) bases his absolute rejection of the theory of "abrogation" (for which see note 87 on 2:106). Since the "abrogation" of any Qur'an -verse would have amounted to its ibtal - that is, to an open or implied declaration that it was henceforth to be regarded as null and void - the verse in question would have to be considered "false" (batil) in the context of the Qur'an as it is before us: and this, as Abu Muslim points out, would clearly contradict the above statement that "no falsehood (batil) can ever attain to it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (41:43)

This is an allusion to the allegation of the Prophet's opponents that he himself was the "author" of what he claimed to be a divine revelation, as well as to their demand that he should "prove" the truth of his prophetic mission by producing a miracle: a scornful attitude with which all the earlier prophets had been confronted at one time or another, and which is epitomized in the "saying" of the unbelievers mentioned in verse 5 of this surah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (41:44)

Sc., "in a tongue which we can understand". Since the Prophet was an Arab and lived in an Arabian environment, his message had to be expressed in the Arabic language, which the people to whom it was addressed in the first instance could understand: see in this connection note 72 on the first sentence of 13:37, as well as the first half of 14:4 - "never have We sent forth any apostle otherwise than [with a message] in his own people's tongue, so that he might make [the truth] clear unto them". Had the message of the Qur'an been formulated in a language other than Arabic, the opponents of the Prophet would have been justified in saying, "between us and thee is a barrier" (verse 5 of this surah).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (41:44)

Lit., "from a far-off place": i.e., they only hear the sound of the words, but cannot understand their meaning.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (41:45)

As was and is the case with the Qur'an, some people accepted the divine message revealed to Moses, and some rejected it (Zamakhshari, Razi), while others disagreed about the import and application of its tenets (Tabari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (41:45)

For an explanation of this passage, as well as of the above parallel between men's attitudes towards the earlier scriptures and the Qur'an, see the second sentence of 10:19 and the corresponding note 29.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (41:45)

Lit., "about it", i.e., doubts as to whether the Quranic approach to problems of man's spirit and body - and, in particular, its stress on the essential unity of these twin aspects of human life (cf. note 118 on the first sentence of 2:143) - is justified or not. In a wider sense, these doubts of the deniers of the truth relate to the question of whether religion as such is "beneficial" or "injurious" to human society - a question which is posed and answered by them with a strong bias against all religious faith.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (41:49)

See note 17 on 11:9.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (41:50)

I.e., man is, as a rule, so blinded by his love of this world that he cannot imagine its ever coming to an end. Implied in this statement is a doubt as to whether there will really be an afterlife, and whether man will really be judged by God on resurrection.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (41:50)

Being fully convinced of his own merit (as expressed in the words, "This is but my due"), he is confident that - in case there should really be a life after death - his own flattering view of himself will be confirmed by God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (41:50)

I.e., the truth of resurrection and of God's judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (41:50)

I.e., the realization of the spiritual blindness in which they spent their life will in itself be a source of their suffering in the hereafter: cf. 17:72 - "whoever is blind [of heart] in this [world] will be blind in the life to come (as well)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (41:51)

Lit., "wide (i.e., prolonged or diffuse) prayers".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (41:52)

According to Razi, this is an implied allusion to the attitude of people who - as mentioned in verses 4 and 5 of this surah - "turn away" from the message of the Qur'an, saying, as it were: "Our hearts are veiled from whatever thou callest us to, [O Muhammad,] and in our ears is deafness, and between us and thee is a barrier.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (41:53)

Lit., "We will show them" or "make them see".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (41:53)

I.e., through a progressive deepening and widening of their insight into the wonders of the universe as well as through a deeper understanding of man's own psyche - all of which points to the existence of a conscious Creator.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (41:53)

I.e., that He is almighty and all-seeing: a fundamental truth which, by itself, should be enough to remind man of his responsibility before Him.

The ``days" of creation represent a yardstick. Thus, the physical universe was created in two days, while the calculation of provisions for all the creatures on earth required four. This also teaches us that there is life only on this planet Earth.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note (41:10)

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 4 (41:41)

The word "Zikr" refers to the Quran's mathematical code, as made clear in 38:1.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 6 (41:43)

Mathematical proof shows that this verse refers to God's Messenger of the Covenant. By adding the gematrical value of "Rashad" (505), plus the value of "Khalifa" (725), plus this verse number (43), we get $505 + 725 + 43 = 1273 = 19 \times 67$. See Appendix 2.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 7 (41:47)

God has revealed this knowledge through His Messenger of the Covenant (Appendix 25).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 8 (41:53)

The letters that compose this verse are 19 and their gematrical values add up to 1387, 19×73 . This great prophecy, together with 9:33,48:28,61:9 & 110:2 informs us that the whole world is destined to accept the Quran as God's unaltered message (See Appendix 38).

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 4 (41:10)

39:67, 56:63-73. Six Eras or Stages: 41:9 Says 'Two Eras', 41:12 says 'Two Eras'. Thus, according to the Qur'an, the creation of the heavens and earth took place in Two Eras. The word Yaum here means a very long period. (A thousand years of your reckoning (32:5) or it may be fifty thousand years (70:4). In scientific terms, the period of creation of the material world is called 'Azoic' or Lifeless. The Qur'an however, divides this period into two and calls it Two Eras. Modern scientific research throws some light on the division of Azoic Era into two: To begin with, the entire space was full of smoke (41:11). Smoke, as we know, is a mixture of gases and solid particles. Areas of condensation appeared later in this gas and the dust cloud, resulting in the formation of Prostars which further developed into stars. The stars further became divided into planets and other smaller heavenly bodies. The division of one complete whole of Smoke to Prostars is a great event. Thus we may call the period before the division of the whole Smoke as Era-I of the creation of the Universe; and the period after this division until the appearance of life as Era-II. The Qur'an divides the time of creation after the appearance of life on the earth into Four Eras. Two plus Four makes 'Six Eras' of evolution. 32:4

When We let the human being taste compassion from Us, he becomes happy with it, and when adversity afflicts them because of what their hands have done, the human being becomes rejecting.
The Monotheist Group	42:48 But if they turn away, then We did not send you as their guardian. You are only required to deliver. Muhammad Asad	42:48 BUT IF they turn away [from thee, O Prophet, know that] We have not sent thee to be their keeper: thou art not bound to do more than deliver the message [entrusted to thee]. And, behold, [such as turn away from Our messages are but impelled by the weakness and inconsistency of human nature: thus,] ⁴⁸ when We give man a taste of Our grace, he is prone to exult in it; ⁴⁹ but if misfortune befalls [any of] them in result of what their own hands have sent forth, then, behold, man shows how bereft he is of all gratitude! ⁵⁰

Shabbir Ahmed	42:48 But if they turn away, We have not sent you as a guardian over them. Your duty is to convey the message. When We cause humans to taste of grace from Us, they rejoice in it. But if a calamity befalls them as a consequence of what their hands have sent forth, then, man is ungrateful. ²³

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (42:1)

H10M40. A70S60Q100. These two combinations of letters/numbers play an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. For the meaning of these letters, see 1:1; 2:1; 40:1; 13:38; 46:10; 74:1-56.

Edip-Layth - End Note (42:2)

See 43:3.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (42:9)

Those who worship their clerics and scholars (9:31; 42:21), especially in Pakistan and India call their religious leaders Mawlana, that is "our lord, our master, our patron." By assuming and using such a title, those religious leaders participate and encourage in this polytheistic practice. As long as Sunni and Shiite mushriks do not submit themselves to God alone, and as long as they consider their religious scholars and clerics to be their masters and lords, they will remain in the darkness of ignorance. See 2:286.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (42:11)

The Biblical verse, Genesis 1:26, stating that humans were created in God's image could be understood in a way that might contradict this verse. For detailed information about the nature of initiation or creation of the universe and living organisms, see 6:79; 82:1.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (42:21)

The religion that the so-called Muslims inherited from their parents and try hard to practice today, has little to do with the system of peacefully surrendering to God alone, which was delivered by Muhammad through the Quran. These clergymen who arrogated themselves and falsely claimed to be the "ulama" (people of knowledge), polluted the message of islam with ignorance. They fabricated numerous sharias (laws), prohibitions, veils, beards, turbans, rules on how to clean one's bottom, rules on how to pee in the bathroom, toothbrushes, right hands, left hands, right feet, left feet, hadiths, sunnas, intercession, holy hair, holy clothes, holy teeth, holy feet traces, hazrats, lords, saints, mawlas, mahdies, innocent emams, orders, sects, rosaries, amulets, dreams, holy loopholes, prayer caps, circumcisions, shrines, extra prayers, extra prohibitions, and numerous Arabic jargon such as mandup, mustahap, makruh, sharif, sayyid and more nonsense. Thus, the religion of Sunnis and Shiites contradicts the divine laws in nature and scripture, and condemns its sincere followers to misery and backwardness. The religious leaders and their political allies contribute greatly to the backwardness of the Muslim world. God Almighty now wants to reform us and open the path of progress with the message described as "one of the greatest" (74:30-37). Similar distortion and corruption was inflicted upon the system of islam (submission to God in peace) by professional religious leaders. For instance, soon after Jesus, a Pharisee-son-of-Pharisee who claimed to have seen Jesus in his vision, started preaching in the name of Jesus. His passionate, yet diabolic doctrine was rejected by the monotheists and muslims, but a majority of people were duped with his delusional passion and clever salesman skills. As a result, he made major changes, including transforming monotheism into polytheism to the extend of coining the name Christian (Acts 11:26). Jesus never silenced women and put them down with xenophobic teachings but St. Paul asked women to submit to men and hush: (1 Timothy 2:7-15; 1 Corinthians 14:34-35; 1 Peter 3:7). Jesus never asked for money for preaching but St. Paul asked for money shamelessly and likened his audience to a flock of sheep to be milked by the holy shepherd! (1 Corinthians 9:7). He was a master of deceit as opposed to Jesus who did not twist the truth to gain followers; Paul made up anything he deemed helpful to increase the number of his milk-giving flock (1 Corinthians 9:22). See 9:31; 33:67. Also, see 2:59; 3:45,51-52-52,55; 4:11,157,171; 5:13-15,72-79; 7:162; 19:36.

Edip-Layth - End Note 6 (42:23)

This verse is mostly abused by Shiite clergymen. They claim that prophet Muhammad was ordered to ask help for HIS relatives. The special status given to the descendents of Muhammad through Fatima and Ali, supported by a distorted meaning of this verse has created a privileged and "sacred" religious class. Hundreds of thousands of bearded leeches in Iran, Iraq and other Middle Eastern countries claim that they are descendents of Prophet Muhammad (Sayyeed or Shareef) and that they are thereby entitled to obligatory financial help. They abuse the verse mentioned above to exploit people economically. However, the verse does not say "my relatives." The context of the verse is plain enough to state that Muhammad does not need a wage from the believers and if they can help somebody, they should help their own relatives. Indeed, helping the relatives is a divine command repeated in 2:83; 4:36; 8:41; 16:90. Also, see 33:33.

Edip-Layth - End Note 7 (42:38)

The most important public task needing consultation is the election of leaders. About thirty years after the departure of Muhammad, polytheists abandoned the election system and established a monarchy or sultanate. Their puppet clerics tried to distort the application of this verse by claiming that consultation to elect a leader was not recommended but the leader, that is, the self-appointed tyrant, should consult. Unfortunately, this travesty of logic became the mainstream view of the followers of hadith and sunna. Ironically, neither the prophet nor his closest companions imposed themselves by self-appointment or by resorting to a glorious or royal genealogy. Those who split hairs to mimic every aspect of life attributed to Muhammad and his companions, from bathroom etiquette to how to groom one's beard, ignored this most important Quranic instruction that was practiced by Muhammad, and his companions for more than 40 years, starting from the immigration to Yathrib and continuing with Abu Bakr, Omar, Uthman and Ali, an era called the Khulafa-i Rashideen, that is, Guided Caliphs. The later satanic Caliphs, assuming the blasphemous titles of "God's Caliph (successor)" or "God's Shadow on Earth" for centuries committed numerous atrocities in the name of God until 1924, when the caliphate was abolished by a young turk, Mustafa Kemal Atatürk. Democracy practiced according to the separation of powers is not perfect, but it is the best system we have discovered so far. As long as the democratic procedure is not corrupted by the money from interest groups or corporations, democracy helps the majority to pursue its self-interest, which ultimately is forced to include individual rights and the interests of minorities. Ottoman Caliphs prohibited the importation and use of the printing machine based on the religious fatwa of a sheikh al-islam (highest cleric within the Ottoman Empire) who prohibited the use of the printing machine from 1455 to 1727, for 272 years, for 100,000 precious days, in a vast land stretching from North Africa to Iran, from today's Turkey to the Arabian Peninsula. While Europe indulged in learning God's signs in nature, shared the knowledge via printing machines, and was rewarded by God with a renaissance, reform, technology, and prosperity, Ottomans devolved and sunk further in ignorance. While Europeans engaged in philosophical arguments, the Ottomans recited the holy book no better than a parrot, the book that highlighted the importance of learning, questioning, discovery, and the pursuit of knowledge. They marveled at handwritten books of hearsay and superstition, at the lousy arguments developed by Ghazzali, who with the full support of a king, aimed to banish philosophy. While Europe sought a better system to save themselves from the tyranny of kings and the Church, the Ottomans recited handwritten poems to praise their corrupt kings and idols. No wonder why the land, the name, the face, and the religion of the children of this population is now associated with backwardness, ignorance, oppression, violence, and poverty. Federal democracies facilitate cooperation among diverse groups with different religions, cultures, and legal systems and provide common ground for a productive, peaceful, and freely co-existing society.

See 18:8; 31:34.

Edip-Layth - End Note 9 (42:52)

For more information about ruh, see 17:85; 15:29. None can guide anyone to salvation, including Jesus and Muhammad. However, every monotheist can guide to the "right path" defined by God. In other words, it is God who defines the system and guidance, and we are expected to deliver it to others. Accepting Muhammad as another source of guidance is setting him up as a partner with God. See 6:112-114; 39:11. Also, see 7:30.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (42:2)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (42:3)

I.e., the basic truths propounded in the Quranic revelation - some of which are summarized in the sequence - are the same as those revealed to all the earlier prophets.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (42:5)

I.e., all human beings (as indicated by the relative pronoun man, which always refers to beings endowed with conscious intelligence). The implication is that whereas all humans - whether believers or unbelievers - are liable to err and to sin, God "is full of forgiveness unto men despite all their evildoing" (13:6). See also the first sentence of 10:11 and the corresponding note 17.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (42:7)

I.e., all mankind (Tabari, Baghawi, Razi). As regards the designation of Mecca as "the foremost of all cities", see note 75 on the identical phrase in 6:92.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (42:7)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (42:8)

The implication being, "but He has not willed it": see second paragraph of 5:48 and the corresponding notes 66 and 67; 16:93 and also note 29 on 10:19.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (42:8)

Or: "He admits whomever He wills unto His grace" - similar to the double meaning inherent in the oft-recurring phrase, Allahu yahdi man yasha'u wa-yudillu man yasha'u, which can be understood either as "God guides whomever He wills and lets go astray whomever He wills", or, alternatively, as "God guides him that wills [to be guided] and lets go astray him that wills [to go astray]". See, in particular, Zamakhshari 's elaborate comment on this problem quoted in note 4 on the second half of 14:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (42:10)

This, connecting with the first sentence of verse 8 above, evidently relates to problems of faith and religious law (Baghawi, Zamakhshari). The above verse has provided some of the great exponents of Islamic Law - Ibn Hazm among them - with one of the main arguments against the acceptance of deductions by analogy (qiyas) as a means to "establish" points of religious law not formulated as such in the nass - i.e., the self-evident (zahir) wording of the Qur'an and, by obvious implication, of the Prophet's commandments. This, as Razi points out, is the meaning of the phrase "on whatever you may differ, the verdict (hukm) thereon rests with God". (See in this connection note 120 on 5:101; also the section on "The Scope of Islamic Law" in my State and Government, pp. 11-15.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (42:11)

See note 81 on 16:72.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (42:11)

The preceding allusion to the God-willed function of sex and, hence, to the polarity and multiplicity evident in all animated nature - man and animal alike - is meant to stress the above statement of the oneness and absolute uniqueness of God. The phrase there is nothing like unto Him" implies that He is fundamentally - and not merely in His attributes - "different" from anything that exists or could exist, or anything that man can conceive or imagine or define (see note 88 on 6:100); and since "there is nothing that could be compared with Him" (112:4), even the "how" of His being "different" from everything else is beyond the categories of human thought.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (42:12)

I.e., He knows not only what every human being "deserves", but also what is intrinsically - though not always perceptibly - good and necessary in the context of His plan of creation. Moreover, all that exists belongs to Him alone, and man is allowed no more than the usufruct of what is commonly regarded as "property".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (42:13)

See first paragraph of note 249 on 2:256. Since, as the sequence shows, the term din cannot apply in this context to "religion" in its widest connotation, including religious Laws - which, by their very nature, have been different in each successive dispensation (cf. note 66 on 5:48) - it obviously denotes here only the ethical and spiritual contents of religion, i.e., "faith" in its most general sense. With this verse, the discourse returns to the theme sounded at the beginning of this surah, namely, the unchanging sameness of the spiritual and moral principles underlying all revealed religions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (42:13)

Lit., "which We have revealed unto thee", implying that it was only through revelation that the Prophet Muhammad came to know "that which God had enjoined upon Noah".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (42:13)

Cf. 3:19 - "the only [true] religion in the sight of God is [man's] self-surrender unto Him"; and 3:85 - "if one goes in search of a religion other than self-surrender unto God, it will never be accepted from him". Parallel with this principle, enunciated by all of God's apostles, is the categorical statement in 21:92 and 23:52 - "Verily, [O you who believe in Me,] this community of yours is one single community, since I am the Sustainer of you all". Most of the great commentators (e.g., Zamakhshari , Razi, Ibn Kathir) understand this as an unequivocal reference to the ecumenical unity of all religions based on belief in the One God, notwithstanding all the differences with regard to "the [specific] statutes and practices enjoined for the benefit of the various communities in accordance with their [time-bound] conditions (ala hasab ahiwaliha)", as expressed by Zamakhshari in his comments on the verse under discussion.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (42:14)

Lit., "they did not break up their unity until after knowledge had come to them" - i.e., the knowledge that God is one, and that the teachings of all of His prophets were essentially the same. Cf. 2:213 and, more explicitly, 23:53 , which comes immediately after the statement that "this community of yours is one single community" (see also note 30 on 23:53).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (42:14)

For an explanation of this passage, see note 29 on 10:19 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (42:14)

Lit., "who have become heirs to the divine writ after them": obviously referring to the Bible and its followers in later times

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (42:14)

Lit., "about it" - i.e., in doubt as to whether the relevant scripture has really been revealed by God, and, ultimately, as to whether there is any truth in the concept of "divine revelation" as such.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (42:15)

I.e., because of this breach of the original unity of men's faith in the One God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (42:15)

Lit., "between you" - i.e., "to induce you to be more tolerant of one another": evidently an allusion to the bitterness which stands in the way of an understanding between the various sects and schools of thought in all revealed religions.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (42:16)

I.e., about His attributes and the "how" of His Being, all of which is beyond the grasp of the human mind.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (42:17)

The above two interpolations are based on 57:25, where the idea underlying this verse has been stated clearly. The implication is that since God Himself has given man, through successive revelations, a standard whereby to discern between right and wrong, it is presumptuous and futile to argue about the nature of His Being and His ultimate judgment: hence the reference, in the second half of this and the next verse, to the Last Hour and, thus, the Day of Judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (42:18)

This is not merely a reference to the sarcastic demand of Muhammad's opponents (mentioned several times in the Qur'an) to bring about their "speedy chastisement" in proof of his being God's message-bearer, but also an oblique allusion to unbelievers of all times who, without having any "proof" either way, categorically reject the idea of resurrection and judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (42:20)

I.e., whereas those who live righteously and turn their endeavours towards spiritual ends are sure to receive in the hereafter more than they are hoping for, those who strive exclusively after worldly rewards may - but not necessarily will - achieve something, and not necessarily all, of their aims, without having any reason to expect "a share in the blessings" that await the righteous in the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (42:21)

Lit., "Is it that they have partners [of God]" - i.e., "do they believe that circumstantial phenomena like wealth, power, 'luck', etc., have something divine about them?" - the implication being that belief in such "forces" is usually at the root of men's pursuance of exclusively worldly ends. (For my above explanatory rendering of the term shuraka - lit., "partners" or "associates" [of God] - see note 15 on 6:22 .)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (42:21)

I.e., which cause them to abandon themselves with an almost religious fervour to something of which God disapproves - namely, the striving after purely materialistic goals and a corresponding disregard of all spiritual and ethical values. For my rendering of din, in this context, as "moral law", see note 3 on 109:6.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (42:21)

Lit., "word of decision", i.e., that His final judgment shall be postponed until the Day of Resurrection (see next note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (42:21)

I.e., God would have made a clear-cut distinction, in this world, between those who look forward to the hereafter and those who care for no more than worldly success, by granting unlimited happiness to the former and causing the latter to suffer: but since it is only in the hereafter that man's life is to be truly fulfilled, God has willed to postpone this distinction until then.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (42:23)

Lit., "love for those who are near (al-qurba)". Some commentators take this to mean "those who are near to me", i.e., Muhammad's kinsfolk: but quite apart from the objection that such a "personal" demand would conflict with the preceding assurance, "No reward do I ask of you", the deliberate omission of any possessive pronoun in respect of the term al-qurba indicates that it is not limited to any personal relationship but, rather, alludes to a relationship common to all human beings: namely, the fellowship of man - a concept which implies the fundamental ethical postulate to care for one another's material and spiritual welfare.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (42:24)

See note 103 on 10:82.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (42:27)

This passage connects with, and elucidates, the statement in the preceding verse that God "responds unto all who attain to faith and do righteous deeds" - a statement which, at first glance, seems to be contrary to the fact that whereas many wrongdoers prosper and are happy, many righteous people suffer hurt and deprivation. In reply to this objection, the above verse points elliptically to man's innate "greed for more and more" (see 102:1), which often causes him to become "grossly overweening whenever he believes himself to be self-sufficient" (96:6). To counteract this tendency, the Qur'an stresses again and again that God's "response" to the righteous - as well as to wrongdoers - will become fully evident only in the life to come, and not necessarily in this world, which, after all, is only the first, short stage of man's existence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (42:28)

This reference to the symbol of life-giving rain connects with the preceding statement that "He bestows [His grace] in due measure, as He wills", and is a preamble, as it were, to the statement in the next verse that all creation is but a visible "sign" or "revelation" of God's existence and purposeful activity, as well as of the God-willed continuation of all life in the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (42:29)

Lit., "in both". In the Qur'an, the expression "the heavens and the earth" invariably denotes the universe in its entirety.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (42:30)

This oft-recurring phrase is a Quranic metonym for man's doings and conscious attitudes in this world, meant to bring out the fact that these doings or attitudes are the "harvest" of a person's spiritual character and have, therefore, a definite influence on the quality of his life in the hereafter. Since the latter is but an organic continuation of earthly life, man's subsequent spiritual growth and bliss or, alternatively, spiritual darkness and suffering - symbolically circumscribed as God's "reward" and "chastisement" or "paradise" and "hell" - depend on, and are a result of, what one has previously "earned".

Muhammad Asad - End Note (42:32)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (42:34)

I.e., because of the evil which they have committed. The above passage is, I believe, a parabolic allusion to the three possible alternatives in the life to come: spiritual progress and happiness (symbolized by ships that sail freely through the sea); spiritual stagnancy (ships that lie motionless on the sea's surface); and spiritual disaster and suffering (summarized in the concept of perdition). The second of these three alternatives seems to point to the condition of those ala'l-a'raf spoken of in 7:46 f. and explained in the corresponding note 37.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (42:35)

For this rendering of yujadilun, see note 25 on 40:35.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (42:38)

This particular qualification of true believers - regarded by the Prophet's Companions as so important that they always referred to this surah by the key-word "consultation" (shura) - has a double import: firstly, it is meant to remind all followers of the Qur'an that they must remain united within one single community (ummah); and, secondly, it lays down the principle that all their communal business must be transacted in mutual consultation. (For the political implications of this principle, see State and Government, pp. 44 ff.).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (42:38)

See note 4 on 2:3. Following as it does immediately upon the call to communal unity and consultation, the "spending on others" bears here the general connotation of social justice.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (42:40)

Lit., "is [or "may be"] an evil like it". In other words, successful struggle against tyranny (which latter is the meaning of the noun baghy in the last sentence of the preceding verse) often tends to degenerate into a similarly tyrannical attitude towards the erstwhile oppressors. Hence, most of the classical commentators (e.g., Baghawi, Zamakhshari, Razi, Baydawi) stress the absolute prohibition of "going beyond what is right" (itida) when defending oneself against tyranny and oppression. (Cf. the passage relating to fighting against "those who wage war against you" in 2:190 ff.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (42:40)

I.e., in this context, such as succumb to the temptation of indulging in undue acts of revenge against their former oppressors.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (42:43)

Cf. 41:34-35, as well as note 44 on 13:22.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (42:44)

See note 4 on 14:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (42:44)

Although this is primarily a reference to "those who oppress [other] people and behave outrageously on earth, offending against all right" (verse 42 above), the meaning of the term is general, applying to all kinds of deliberate evildoers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (42:44)

I.e., a "second chance" on earth: cf. 6:27-28.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (42:45)

The term ahl denotes primarily the "people" of one town, country or family, as well as the "fellow-members" of one race, religion, profession, etc. In its wider, ideological sense it is applied to people who have certain characteristics in common, e.g., ahl al-ilm ("people of knowledge", i.e., scholars), or who follow one and the same persuasion or belief, e.g., ahl al-kitab ("the followers of [earlier] revelation"), ahl al-Qur'an ("the followers of the Qur'an"), and so forth. Since, as has been pointed out in the note 44, the above passage refers primarily - though not exclusively - to the tyrants and oppressors spoken of in verse 42, the term ahlum evidently connotes "their followers". Thus, the above sentence implies that every kind of evil-doing (zulm), and particularly the oppression of others, inevitably results in a spiritual injury to, and ultimately the self-destruction of, its perpetrators and/or their followers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (42:47)

Lit., "from God".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (42:48)

This interpolation - necessary for a proper understanding of the context - is based on Razi's convincing explanation of how this passage connects with the preceding one. Man is, as a rule, absorbed in a pursuit of material goods and comforts, the achievement of which he identifies with "happiness"; hence, he pays but scant attention to spiritual aims and values, and the more so if he is called upon to abandon his selfish pursuits in favour of the - to him as yet hypothetical - life in the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (42:48)

I.e., when God bestows on him a measure of material benefits, man tends to exult in this "success" as such, attributing it exclusively to his own ability and cleverness (cf. the first sentence of 41:50).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (42:48)

I.e., instead of remembering his past happiness with gratitude, he calls the very existence of God in question, arguing that if God did really exist, He "could not possibly have permitted" so much misfortune and unhappiness to prevail in the world: a fallacious argument inasmuch as it does not take the reality of the hereafter into account and is, moreover, based on a concept of God in terms of purely human feelings and expectations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (42:50)

The purport of this passage is a re-affirmation of the fact that whatever happens to man is an outcome of God's unfathomable will: a fact which is illustrated in the sequence by the most common, recurrent phenomenon in man's life - the unpredictability of male or female births, as well as of barrenness: and so, too, God's bestowal of worldly happiness and unhappiness cannot be measured or predicted in terms of what man may regard as his "due".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (42:51)

This is the primary meaning of wahy, a term which combines the concepts of suddenness and inner illumination (Raghib); in the usage of the Qur'an, it is often, though by no means always, synonymous with "revelation". The above passage connects with the first paragraph of verse 48, which speaks of the divine message entrusted to the Prophet.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (42:51)

Cf. 53:10.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (42:52)

I.e., in all the three ways mentioned in the preceding verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (42:52)

The term ruh (lit., "spirit" or "soul") has in the Qur'an often the meaning of "divine inspiration" (see surah 16 note 2). In the present context, it evidently denotes the contents of the divine inspiration bestowed on the Prophet Muhammad, i.e., the Qur'an (Tabari, Zamakhshari, Razi, Ibn Kathir), which is meant to lead man to a more intensive spiritual life: hence my above rendering.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (42:52)

I.e., that the very concept of "faith" implies man's complete self-surrender (islam) to God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (42:53)

Lit., "unto God do all things (al-umur) pursue their course": i.e., all things go back to Him as their source, and from His will depends the course which they take (Baydawi).

Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 3 (42:21)

The Islam of today's Muslim world has been so distorted, it has become a Satanic cult. The Ulama, or religious scholars, have added many extraneous laws, prohibitions, dress codes, dietary regulations, and religious practices never authorized by God. This is one of the main reasons for sending God's Messenger of the Covenant (9:31, 33:67, and Appendix 33).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 4 (42:24)

The disbelievers added 2 false statements at the end of Sura 9 to commemorate their idol, the prophet Muhammad. God has revealed overwhelming evidence to erase this blasphemy and establish the truth. By adding the gematrical value of "Rashad Khalifa" (1230), plus the verse number (24), we get 1254, 19x66 (please see Appendices 2&24 for the details).

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (43:1)

H10M40. The combination of these two letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. For the meaning of these letters see 1:1; 2:1; 40:1; 13:38; 46:10; 74:1-56.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (43:3)

The root of ARaBy (Arabic) is ARB, and also means "excellent" or "perfect" (See 56:37). Since the message of the Quran was sent to all humanity and jinns, the eloquence of the language of the Arabic Quran does not necessarily come from its being in the Arabic language, but its Arabic being ARB, that is, excellent or perfect. In other words, the message of this verse is not about the proper name Arabic, but about its literary meaning. Every Justin might not be just; every Mr. Smart may not be smart. Similarly, each Arabic text is not necessarily Arabic (excellent). The language of the Quran is Arabic, flawless, and perfect. Because the Quran was revealed to an Arabic speaking prophet in Arabic, and is taught by the Gracious (55:2), it is a message to all humanity regardless of their language.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (43:56)

The word salaf (past, ancestors, predecessors) is currently used as a label by the radical Sunnis who reject sectarian jurisprudence, yet rely directly on hadith and sunna; they claim to be the followers of the prophet and his companions, whom they call salaf. The Salafi movement started with Ibn Taymiyya, a charismatic scholar who rejected some major tenets of orthodox teachings. Orthodox Sunni sects promote blindly following the fatwas or jurisprudence of a particular sect and discourage from interpreting and inferring directly from hadith. Ibn Taymiyya argued that every Muslim must have direct access to hadith books and learn their religion through studying them, rather than being bound by the views of earlier scholars. Though Salafis justifiably rejected many polytheistic teachings and rituals, such as sectarian jurisprudence, intercession and imploring shrines, they unfortunately indulged in fabricated hadith, and advocated a narrow (mis)understanding of the Quran, such as rejecting the use of metaphors. Since, they set hadith sources as partners with God in practicing Islam, they ended up with a religion that reflected a concoction of Arabic, Jewish and Christian culture from medieval times. The majority of salafis live in Saudi Arabia and they promote a Taliban-style tyrannical system that produces an ignorant, misogynistic and backward crowd who subject themselves to being herded like sheep by the moral police. As we noted in relation to the words hadith, sunna, and ijma, the word salaf too has negative connotations in the Quran. This is a miraculous prophecy of the Quran; major sects who abandoned the Quran by setting up various lists of "holy" idols and teachings as partners with God in His system, use labels and names that are convicted by the Quran. The word salaf in all its derivatives, occurs eight times (2:285; 4:22,23; 5:95; 8:38; 10:30; 69:24; 43:56), and in only one occurrence, here, is it used as a reference to a community of people who were ignorant, aggressive and oppressive. For the prophetic reference of the Quran regarding other sectarian labels, see: 33:38.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (43:61)

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (43:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (43:2)

Regarding this rendering of the term mubin, see note 2 on 12:1.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (43:3)

See note 3 on 12:3.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (43:4)

Cf. last clause of 13:39 - "with Him (indahu) is the source (umm) of all revelation". The term umm (lit., "mother") has often the idiomatic connotation of "origin" or "source" (asl), and sometimes - as in 3:7 - of "essence". In the present context, only the former meaning is applicable. See also note on the last verse 22 of surah 85.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (43:5)

For this rendering of the term musrif, see note 21 on the last sentence of 10:12 . The above rhetorical question answers itself, of course, in the negative - implying that God never ceases to "remind" the sinner through His revelations, and always accepts repentance.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (43:8)

I.e., than the people addressed in verse 5 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (43:9)

See surah 30 note 45.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (43:10)

Cf. 20:53.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (43:11)

The grammatical form nazzala implies here recurrence: hence, "again and again".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (43:12)

Lit., "all pairs". Some commentators regard the term azwaj as synonymous in this context with "kinds" (Baghawi, Zamakhshari, Baydawi, Ibn Kathir): i.e., they take the above phrase to mean no more than that God created all kinds of things, beings and phenomena. Others (e.g., Tabari) see in it a reference to the polarity evident in all creation. Ibn Abbas (as quoted by Razi) says that it denotes the concept of opposites in general, like "sweet and sour, or white and black, or male and female"; to which Razi adds that everything in creation has its complement, "like high and low, right and left, front and back, past and future, being and attribute", etc., whereas God - and He alone - is unique, without anything that could be termed "opposite" or "similar" or "complementary". Hence, the above sentence is an echo of the statement that "there is nothing that could be compared with Him" (112:4).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (43:13)

Lit., "over its backs" - i.e., according to all classical commentators, the "backs" of the above-mentioned animals and ships alike, the singular form of the pronoun ("its") relating to the collective entity comprised in the concept of "all whereon you ride" (ma tarkabun): in other words, "all that you use or may use by way of transport". As regards my rendering of li-tasta'u as "so that you might gain mastery", I should like to point out that the verb istawa (lit., "he established himself") has often the connotation adopted by me: see Jawhari, Raghib and Lisan al-Arab, art. sawa; also Lane IV, 1478.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (43:15)

I.e., despite the fact that most people readily admit that God has created all that exists (verse 9 above), some of them tend to forget His uniqueness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (43:15)

Lit., "attribute to Him a part out of [some of] His creatures (ibad)": cf. 6:100 and the corresponding notes. The noun juz' (lit., "part") evidently denotes here "a part of Himself", as implied in the concept of "offspring"; hence my rendering. If, on the other hand, juz is understood in its literal sense, the above sentence could have (as Razi assumes) a more general meaning, namely, "they attribute a part of His divinity to some of the beings created by Him". However, in view of the sequence, which clearly refers to the blasphemous attribution of "offspring" to God, my rendering seems to be preferable.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (43:16)

It should be remembered that the people thus addressed were the pagan Arabs, who believed that some of their goddesses, as well as the angels, were "God's daughters". In view of the fact that those pre-Islamic Arabs regarded daughters as a mere liability and their birth as a disgrace, this verse is obviously ironical. (Cf. in this connection 16:57-59.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (43:17)

Lit., "what he postulates as a likeness of [or "as likely for"] the Most Gracious": i.e., female offspring, which implies a natural "likeness" to its progenitor.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (43:18)

I.e., one who, from the viewpoint of the pre-Islamic Arabs, would have no function other than "embellishing" a man's life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (43:18)

Lit., "he finds himself in an invisible (ghayr mubin) conflict" - i.e., an inner conflict which he does not quite admit to his consciousness: cf. 16:59 - "[he debates within himself:] Shall he keep this child despite the contempt [which he feels for it] - or shall he bury it in the dust?" (See also, in particular, the corresponding note 66.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (43:19)

Or: "who are but worshippers [or "creatures"] (ibad) of the Most Gracious" - in either case stressing their having been created and, hence, not being divine.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (43:19)

Lit., "their testimony", i.e., regarding the "sex" of the angels, who are spiritual in nature (Razi) and, therefore, sexless.]

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (43:20)

I.e., they cannot have any "knowledge" of something that is devoid of all reality - because, far from having "willed" their sin, God had left it to their free will to make a moral choice between right and wrong. (See in this connection surah 6 note 143.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (43:21)

I.e., a revelation which would allow man to worship other beings beside God, or to attribute "offspring" to Him: a rhetorical question implying its own negation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (43:23)

For this rendering of the term mutraf (derived from the verb tarafa), see note 147 on 11:116.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (43:23)

Commenting on this passage, Razi says: "Had there been in the Qur'an nothing but these verses, they would have sufficed to show the falsity of the principle postulating [a Muslim's] blind, unquestioning adoption of [another person's] religious opinions (ibtai al-qawl bit-taqlid): for, God has made it clear [in these verses] that those deniers of the truth had not arrived at their convictions by way of reason, and neither on the clear authority of a revealed text, but solely by blindly adopting the opinions of their forebears and predecessors; and all this God has mentioned in terms of blame and sharp disparagement."

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (43:24)

Whereas in some of the readings of the Qur'an the opening word of this verse is vocalized as an imperative, qul ("say"), the reading of Hafs ibn Sulayman al-Asadi - on which this translation is based - gives the pronunciation qala ("he said" or, since it is a repeated occurrence, "he would say").

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (43:26)

Namely, the inadmissibility of blindly accepting the religious views sanctioned by mere ancestral tradition and thus prevalent in one's environment, and regarding them as valid even though they may conflict with one's reason and/or divine revelation. Abraham's search after truth is mentioned several times in the Qur'an, and particularly in 6:74 ff. and 21:51 ff.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (43:29)

I.e., God did not impose on them any moral obligations before making the meaning of right and wrong clear to them through a revealed message. Primarily, this is an allusion to the pagan contemporaries of the Prophet, and to the prosperity which they had been allowed to enjoy for a long time (cf. 21:44); in its wider sense, however, this passage implies that God would never call people to task for any wrong they may have done so long as they have not been clearly shown how to discriminate between good and evil (cf. 6:131-132).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (43:30)

See note 12 on 74:24, where this connotation of sihr appears for the first time in the course of Quranic revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (43:31)

I.e., Mecca and Ta'if - implying that if it were really a divine revelation it would have been bestowed on a person of "great standing", and not on Muhammad, who had neither wealth nor a position of eminence in his native city.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (43:33)

Since "man has been created weak" (4:28), it is almost a "law of nature" that whenever he is exposed to the prospect of great wealth he is liable to lose sight of all spiritual and moral considerations, and to become utterly selfish, greedy and ruthless.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (43:35)

The primary meaning of the noun zukhruf is "gold"; its application to "ornaments" or (as in 10:24) to "artful adornment" is only secondary (Taj al-'Arus).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (43:36)

Lit., "to him We assign a satan, and he becomes his other self (qarin)": see note 24 on 41:25. For the psychological connotation of the term shaytan as "evil impulse", see first half of note 16 on 15:17 as well as note 31 on 14:22 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (43:38)

Lit., "until".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (43:38)

Thus do most of the commentators interpret the above phrase which, literally, reads "the two easts" (al-mashriqayn). This interpretation is based on the idiomatic usage, not infrequent in classical Arabic, of referring to two opposites - or two conceptually connected entities - by giving them the designation of one of them in the dual form: e.g., "the two moons", denoting "sun and moon ; "the two Basrahs", i.e., Kufah and Basrah; and so forth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (43:39)

I.e., "you will not be consoled, as would have been the case in earthly suffering, by the knowledge that you are not to suffer alone" (Zamakhshari, Razi, Baydawi). Since this address is formulated in the plural and not in the dual, it evidently relates to all sinners who, in their lifetime, were impelled by their own evil impulses - their "other selves", as it were - to "remain blind to the remembrance of God". In its wider meaning, the above verse implies that all evil deeds, whenever and wherever committed, are but links of one chain, one evil ineluctably leading to another: cf. 14:49 - "on that Day thou wilt see those who were lost in sin linked together (muqarranin) in fetters" - a phrase which has been explained in my corresponding note. It is noteworthy that the participle muqarran is derived from the same verbal root (qarana) as the term qarin (rendered by me in verses 36 and 38 of this surah and in 41:25 as "other self"): and this, I believe, is a further indication, alluded to in the present verse, to the "togetherness" of all evil deeds.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (43:40)

This rhetorical question implies a negative answer: cf. 35:22 - "thou canst not make hear such as are [deaf of heart like the dead] in the graves".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (43:44)

For the above rendering of dhikr as "[a source of] eminence", see first half of note 13 on 21:10.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (43:44)

The meaning is that on the Day of Judgment all prophets will be asked, metaphorically, as to what response they received from their people (cf. 5:109), and those who professed to follow them will be called to account for the spiritual and social use they made - or did not make - of the revelation conveyed to them: and thus, the "eminence" promised to the followers of Muhammad will depend on their actual behaviour and not on their mere profession of faith.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (43:45)

I.e., "look into the earlier revelations and ask thyself".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (43:46)

I.e., in pursuance of the principle, referred to above, that it is not permissible to worship anyone or anything but God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (43:47)

See note 94 on the last sentence of 6:109.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (43:48)

The concept of "returning" to God implies that the instinctive ability to perceive His existence is inherent in human nature as such, and that man's "turning away" from God is only a consequence of spiritual degeneration, and not an original tendency or predisposition: cf. 7:172-173. The "suffering" (adhab) mentioned above relates to the plagues with which the recalcitrant Egyptians were struck (see 7:130 ff.).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (43:51)

An allusion to the impediment in speech from which Moses suffered (cf. 20:27-28 and the corresponding note 17), or perhaps to the contents of his message, which to Pharaoh appeared unconvincing.]

Muhammad Asad - End Note (43:52)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (43:53)

In ancient Egypt , golden armlets and necklaces were regarded as princely insignia (cf. Genesis xli, 42), or at least as evidence of high social dignity. This is apparently an echo of the pagan objection to Muhammad, mentioned in verse 31 above: "Why was not this Qur'an bestowed from on high on some great man of the two cities?" The same is the case with the subsequent reference to the "absence of angels".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (43:58)

Objecting to the Quranic condemnation of their idolatrous worship of angels - whom they describe here as "our deities" - the pagan Quraysh pointed to the parallel Christian worship of Jesus as "the son of God", and even as "God incarnate", and argued more or less thus: "The Qur'an states that Jesus was purely human - and yet the Christians, whom the same Qur'an describes as 'followers of earlier revelation' (ahl al-kitab), consider him divine. Hence, are we not rather justified in our worshipping angels, who are certainly superior to a mere human being?" The fallacy inherent in this "argument" is disposed of in the sequence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (43:58)

Since the Qur'an condemns explicitly, and in many places, the deification of Jesus by the Christians, this unwarranted deification cannot be used as an argument in favour of the pagan worship of angels and, thus, against the Qur'an: in the words of Zamakhshari , such an argument amounts to "applying a false analogy to a false proposition" (qiyas batil bi-batil).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (43:60)

Implying not only that Jesus was not a supernatural being, but that the angels, too, are mere created beings finite in their existence - as indicated by the phrase "succeeding one another" - and, therefore, utterly removed from the status of divinity (Baydawi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (43:61)

Whereas most of the commentators regard the pronoun hu in innahu as relating to Jesus and, consequently, interpret the above phrase as "he is indeed a means to know [i.e., an indication of the coming of] the Last Hour", some authorities - e.g., Qatadah, Al-Hasan al-Basri and Sa'id ibn Jubayr (all of them quoted by Tabari, Baghawi and Ibn Kathir) - relate the pronoun to the Qur'an, and understand the phrase in the sense adopted in my rendering. The specific mention of the Last Hour in the above context is meant to stress man's ultimate responsibility before the Creator and, therefore, the fact that worship is due to Him alone: and so this parenthetical passage follows logically upon the mention of the false deification of Jesus.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 49 (43:63)

I.e., with divine revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 50 (43:63)

According to Tabari, the restrictive allusion to "some of that", etc., bears on the realm of faith and morals alone, since it was not a part of Jesus' mission to deal with problems of his people's worldly life. This observation coincides with the image of Jesus forthcoming from the (admittedly fragmentary) description of his teachings available to us in the Synoptic Gospels.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 51 (43:65)

Sc., regarding the nature of Jesus and the inadmissibility of worshipping anyone but God: an allusion to subsequent developments in Christianity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 52 (43:67)

I.e., they will hate one another - those who realize that they have been led astray by their erstwhile friends, and the latter, because they see that they will be held responsible for the sins of those whom they have led astray.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 53 (43:74)

I.e., for an unspecified period: see the last paragraph of 6:128 and the corresponding note, as well as the saying of the Prophet quoted in note 10 on 40:12, indicating that - in accordance with the Quranic statement, "God has willed upon Himself the law of grace and mercy" (6:12 and 54) - the otherworldly suffering described as "hell" will not be of unlimited duration. Among the theologians who hold this view is Razi, who stresses in his comments on the above passage that the expression "they shall abide (khalidun) in the suffering of hell" indicates only an indeterminate duration, but "does not convey the meaning of perpetuity" (la yafidu d-dawam).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 54 (43:78)

As is evident from verses 81 below, this is a reference to the truth of God's oneness and uniqueness, which those who believe in Jesus as "the son of God" refuse, as it were, to acknowledge: thus, the discourse returns here to the question of the "nature" of Jesus touched upon in verses 57-65.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 55 (43:79)

The verb barama or abrama signifies, literally, "he twined" or "twisted [something] together", e.g., the strands that are to form a rope; or "he twisted [something] well" or "strongly". Tropically, it connotes the act of "establishing" or "determining" a thing, a proposition, a course of events, etc. (Jawhari). According to the Lisan al-Arab, the phrase abrama al-amr has the meaning of "he determined (ahkama) the case". In the present context, the term amr, having no definite article, signifies "anything" or - in its widest sense - "anything that should [or "could"] be": and so, taking the preceding verse into account, we arrive at the meaning of arbitrarily "determining what [the truth] should be" - i.e., in contradiction to what the Qur'an postulates as the truth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 56 (43:80)

This is most probably an allusion to the centuries-long subtle Christian controversies on the question as to whether or not Jesus was "the son of God" and, hence, divine. These controversies were often influenced by a subconscious leaning of some of the early Christian thinkers towards ancient, mostly Mithraistic, cults and concepts which were in the beginning strongly opposed by unitarian theologians, foremost among them Arius, Patriarch of Alexandria (about 280 -336 C.E.). However, at the politically-motivated Council of Nicaea (325 C.E.), the Arian views - which until then had been shared by the overwhelming majority of articulate Christians - were condemned as "heretical", and the doctrine of Christ's divinity was officially formulated in the so-called Nicene Creed as the basis of Christian beliefs. (See also note 60 on verse 83 below).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 57 (43:80)

Lit., "Our messengers, i.e., angels.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 58 (43:82)

Cf. the last clause of surah 9 and the corresponding note 171.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 59 (43:82)

See note 88 on the last sentence of 6:100.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 60 (43:83)

Evidently an allusion to the verbal subtleties of the Nicene Creed, and particularly the statement, "Jesus Christ, the Son of God, begotten, not made [i.e., not created], by the Father as His only Son, of the same substance as the Father, God of God", etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 61 (43:86)

A reference to falsely deified saints or prophets and, particularly (in view of the context), to Jesus.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 62 (43:86)

For an explanation of the Quranic concept of "intercession", see 10:3 - "There is none that could intercede with Him unless He grants leave therefor" - and the corresponding note 7. My interpolation, at the end of the above verse, of the words "that God is one and unique" is based on Razi's interpretation of this passage, implying that a mere oral "bearing witness to the truth" is useless if it is not the outcome of an inner awareness of God's oneness and uniqueness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 63 (43:88)

Razi (on whose commentary the above interpolation is based), regards this as a reference to the Prophet Muhammad. It seems, however, that the meaning is wider, embracing every believer, of whatever denomination, who is distressed at the blindness of people who attribute divinity or divine qualities to any being other than God Himself.

Verses 43:57-60: The idolaters in this instance are referring to angels being their gods, and claim that angels are better than Jesus who was a mortal human being according to the Qur'an. Furthermore, angels being devoid of free will are obviously sinless, whereas humans, endowed with free will, are accountable for their actions. These verses are refuting divinity of angels by stating that they succeed one another. Also being refuted is the Doctrine of Atonement whereby mere acceptance of Jesus as the 'Savior' is believed to render humans sinless like angels. But God willed the earth to be populated by the imperfect humans given the capacity to make their own choices

Many commentators regard Innahu in this verse as relating to Jesus and then postulate that Jesus is the sign of the Resurrection Day. In my opinion, this fallacy is the result of: 1. Missing the context of free will in the last few verses. 2. Taking the Hour only to mean the Resurrection Day. But 'The Hour' is frequently mentioned in the Qur'an to indicate Revolution, the ultimate outcome, and the culmination of the Law of Requit. The Revolution alluded to here points to the advent of Prophet Muhammad (S). 3. Losing sight of the capital format of M in 'follow Me', that is God. There is no 'Qul', say to them, or tell them O Prophet, in this verse. 'Follow Me' would then clearly signify 'Follow God's revelation, the Qur'an'. It is not Jesus asking to follow him. Here is my understanding of the verse: 'Jesus has already foretold the advent of Muhammad (S) and a benevolent revolution at his hands. So, follow My commands given in this Book'

As detailed in Appendix25, the End of theWorld is given in the Quran, and the birthdate of Jesus provided one of the significant signs that the calculations are correct. We learn that the world will end in the year 2280 (19x120) after the birth of Jesus (see 47:18). Additionally, both the lunar year (1710) & the solar year (2280) are divisible by 570 (19x30), the number of years from the birth of Jesus to the birth of Muhammad. Thus, the birthdate of Jesus is a marker.

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (44:1)

H10M40. The combination of these two letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. For the meaning of these letters, see 1:1; 2:1; 40:1; 13:38; 46:10; 74:1-56.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (44:41)

See 2:286.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (44:54)

The word hur means intelligent, pure, dazzling friend; male or female. Words derived from the same root are used to mean back and forth conversation (hiwar, muhawara) (18:34,37; 58:1), disciple or true friend (hawary) (3:52; 5:111-112; 61:14), and to return (84:14). See 52:20; 55:72; 56:22.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (44:56)

Because of our rebellion in paradise we are sent to this world via a transition between universes, which is called death. See 40:11.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (44:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (44:2)

See note 2 on 12:1.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (44:3)

I.e., the night on which the revelation of the Qur'an began: see surah 97.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (44:3)

The revelation of the Qur'an is but a continuation and, indeed, the climax of all divine revelation which has been going on since the very dawn of human consciousness. Its innermost purpose has always been the warning extended by God to man not to abandon himself to mere material ambitions and pursuits and, thus, to lose sight of spiritual values.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (44:4)

Lit., "was made distinct everything wise", i.e., "wisely" or "in wisdom": a metonymical attribution of the adjective "wise" - which in reality relates to God, the maker of that distinction - to what has thus been made distinct (Zamakhshari and Razi). The meaning is that the revelation of the Qur'an, symbolized by that "blessed night" of its beginning, provides man with a standard whereby to discern between good and evil, or between all that leads to spiritual growth through an ever-deepening realization (ma'rifah) of God's existence, on the one hand, and all that results in spiritual blindness and self-destruction, on the other.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (44:7)

Lit., "if you had but inner certainty". According to Abu Muslim al-Isfahani (as quoted by Razi), this means, "you would know it if you would but truly desire inner certainty and would pray for it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (44:9)

Lit., "are toying in doubt": i.e., their half-hearted admission of the possibility that God exists is compounded of doubt and irony (Zamakhshari) - doubt as to the proposition of God's existence, and an ironical amusement at the idea of divine revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (44:14)

A reference to the allegation of the Prophet's opponents that someone else had "imparted" to him the ideas expressed in the Qur'an (see 16:103 and the corresponding notes 129 and 130.), or at least had "helped" him to compose it (cf. 25:4 and note 5 and 6).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (44:15)

Lit., "remove". This is apparently said on the time-level of the present - i.e., before the coming of the Last Hour - so as to give the sinners an opportunity to repent.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (44:18)

Most of the classical commentators (e.g., Tabari, Zamakhshari, Razi, Baydawi) point out that this phrase can be understood in either of two senses, namely: "Give in unto me, O God's bondmen (ibad), implying a call to the Egyptians (since all human beings are "God's bondmen") to accept the divine message which Moses was about to convey to them; or, alternatively, "Give up to me God's servants", i.e., the children of Israel, who were kept in bondage in Egypt. Inasmuch as the vocalization ibada is applicable to the vocative as well as the accusative case, either of these two interpretations is legitimate.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (44:20)

Lit., "lest you throw stones at me". It is to be noted that the verb rajama is used in the physical sense of "throwing stones" as well as, metaphorically, in the sense of "throwing aspersions" or "reviling".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (44:24)

Or: "cleft" - the expression rahwan having both these connotations (Jawhari, with especial reference to the above phrase). See also notes 33 and 35 on 26:63-66.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (44:29)

For these particular allegories of life in paradise, see note 41 on 18:31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (44:31)

For this rendering of the term musrif, see the last surah 10 note 21.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (44:32)

I.e., according to all commentators, above all people of their time, because at that time the children of Israel were the only people who worshipped the One God: which is the reason of the frequent Quranic references to the story of their delivery from bondage. The stress on God's having "chosen them knowingly" alludes to His foreknowledge that in later times they would deteriorate morally and thus forfeit His grace (Zamakhshari and Razi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (44:33)

Lit., "as would have in them a manifest test": an allusion to the long line of prophets rose in their midst, as well as to the freedom and prosperity which they were to enjoy in the Promised Land. All this presaged a test of their sincerity with regard to the spiritual principles which in the beginning raised them "above all other people" and, thus, of their willingness to act as God's message-bearers to the entire world. The formulation of the above sentence implies elliptically that they did not pass that test inasmuch as they soon forgot the spiritual mission for which they had been elected, and began to regard themselves as God's "chosen people" simply on account of their descent from Abraham: a notion which the Qur'an condemns in many places. Apart from this, the majority of the children of Israel very soon lost their erstwhile conviction that the life in this world is but the first and not the final stage of human life, and - as their Biblical history shows - abandoned themselves entirely to the pursuit of material prosperity and power. (See next note.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (44:34)

Although, on the face of it, by "these people" the Israelites are meant, the reference is obviously a general one, applying to all who hold the views expressed in the sequence, and in particular to the pagan contemporaries of the Prophet Muhammad. Nevertheless, there is a subtle connection between this passage and the preceding allusion to the "test" with which the children of Israel were to be faced: for it is a historical fact that up to the time of the destruction of the Second Temple and their dispersion by the Roman emperor Titus, the priestly aristocracy among the Jews, known as the Sadducees, openly denied the concepts of resurrection, divine judgment and life in the hereafter, and advocated a thoroughly materialistic outlook on life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (44:35)

I.e., "it is a final death, with nothing beyond it".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (44:36)

I.e., "bring our forefathers back to life and let them bear witness that there is a hereafter". This ironic demand accords with the saying of the unbelievers mentioned in 43:22 and 23, "We found our forefathers agreed on what to believe - and, verily, it is in their footsteps that we find our guidance!" Thus, in the last resort, the fact that their ancestors did not believe in a hereafter is to them as conclusive an argument against it as the fact that nobody has as yet come back to life to confirm the truth of resurrection.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (44:37)

"Tubba" was the title borne by a succession of powerful Himyar kings who ruled for centuries over the whole of South Arabia , and were finally overcome by the Abyssinians in the fourth century of the Christian era. They are mentioned elsewhere in the Qur'an (50:14) as having denied the truth of resurrection and God's judgment.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (44:38)

I.e., without meaning or purpose (cf. 21:16) - implying that if there were no hereafter, man's life on earth would be utterly meaningless, and thus in contradiction to the above as well as the subsequent statement, "none of all this have We created without [an inner] truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (44:39)

See note 11 on 10:5.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (44:40)

See note 6 on 77:13.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (44:43)

See surah 37 note 22.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (44:44)

The term al-athim (lit., "the sinful one") has here apparently a specific connotation, referring to a willful denial of resurrection and of God's judgment: in other words, of all sense and meaning in man's existence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (44:46)

For this tropical meaning of the term hamim, see surah 6 note 62.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (44:49)

Lit., "for, behold, thou wert", etc. - thus alluding to the sin of arrogance due to disbelief in a continuation of life after death and, hence, in man's ultimate responsibility to God. (Cf. 96:6-7 - "Verily, man becomes grossly overweening whenever he believes himself to be self- sufficient" - and the corresponding note.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (44:50)

I.e., the continuation of life after death.

Muhammad Asad - End Note (44:53)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (44:54)

For the rendering of hur'in as "companions pure, most beautiful of eye", see surah 56, notes 8 and 13. It is to be noted that the noun zawj (lit., "a pair" or - according to the context - "one of a pair") applies to either of the two sexes, as does the transitive verb zawaja, "he paired" or "joined", i.e., one person with another.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (44:55)

Cf. 43:73.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (44:56)

Lit., "except [or "beyond"] the first [i.e., erstwhile] death" (cf. 37:58-59).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (44:57)

I.e., by His having offered them guidance, of which they availed themselves: thus, the attainment of ultimate felicity is the result of an interaction between God and man, and of man's communion with Him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (44:58)

See note 81 on 19:97.

Edip-Layth	45:17 We gave them proof in the matter, but then they disputed after the knowledge had come to them, out of jealousy amongst themselves. Your Lord will judge them on the day of resurrection regarding everything that they have disputed.
The Monotheist Group	45:17 And We gave them clarity in the matter, but then they disputed after the knowledge had come to them, out of jealousy amongst themselves. Your Lord will judge them on the Day of Resurrection regarding everything that they have disputed.
Muhammad Asad	45:17 And We gave them clear indications of the purpose [of faith]; ¹⁵ and it was only after all this knowledge had been vouchsafed to them that they began, out of mutual jealousy, to hold divergent views: ¹⁶ [but,] verily, thy Sustainer will judge between them on Resurrection Day regarding all whereon they were wont to differ. ¹⁷
Rashad Khalifa	45:17 We have given them herein clear commandments. Ironically, they did not dispute this until the knowledge had come to them. This is due to jealousy on their part. Surely, your Lord will judge them on the Day of Resurrection regarding everything they have disputed.
Shabbir Ahmed	45:17 And gave them a clear set of commandments. Yet, they fell for differences through rivalry among themselves after knowledge had come to them. Your Lord will judge between them on the Resurrection Day concerning all they differed.

The Monotheist Group	45:18 Then We have established you on the correct path; so follow it and do not follow the desires of those who do not know.
Muhammad Asad	45:18 And, finally, [O Muhammad,] We have set thee on a way by which the purpose [of faith] may be fulfilled: ¹⁸ so follow thou this [way], and follow not the likes and dislikes of those who do not know [the truth]. ¹⁹

Rashad Khalifa	45:18 We then appointed you to establish the correct laws; you shall follow this, and do not follow the wishes of those who do not know.
Shabbir Ahmed	45:18 And finally, We appointed you (O Messenger!) to establish clear commandments about all matters. So you shall follow this (way), and do not follow the whims of those who do not know (the truth). ⁶

The Monotheist Group	45:19 They cannot help you against God in the least. And the transgressors are allies to one another, while God is the Protector of the righteous.
Muhammad Asad	45:19 Behold, they could never be of any avail to thee if thou wert to defy the will of God ²⁰ for, verily, such evildoers are but friends and protectors of one another, whereas God is the Protector of all who are conscious of Him.
Rashad Khalifa	45:19 They cannot help you at all against GOD. It is the transgressors who ally themselves with one another, while GOD is the Lord of the righteous.
Shabbir Ahmed	45:19 They cannot avail you the least against God. The wrongdoers are friends to one another, while God is the protecting Friend of those who are observant in their journey of life.

The Monotheist Group	45:21 Or do those who work evil expect that We would treat them the same as those who believe and do good works, in their present life and their death? Miserable is how they judge.

Muhammad Asad	45:21 Now as for those who indulge in sinful doings - do they think that We place them, both in their life and their death, on an equal footing with those who have attained to faith and do righteous deeds? Bad, indeed, is their judgment. ²²
Rashad Khalifa	45:21 Do those who work evil expect that we will treat them in the same manner as those who believe and lead a righteous life? Can their life and their death be the same? Wrong indeed is their judgment.
Shabbir Ahmed	45:21 What! Do those who disrupt others' lives think that We will treat them, in life and death, like believers and helpers of humanity? Evil is the judgment they make!

The Monotheist Group	45:22 And God created the heavens and the Earth with truth, and so that every soul may be recompensed for whatever it earned, and they will not be wronged.
Muhammad Asad	45:22 for, God has created the heavens and the earth in accordance with [an inner] truth, ²³ and [has therefore willed] that every human being shall be recompensed for what he has earned and none shall be wronged.
Rashad Khalifa	45:22 GOD created the heavens and the earth for a specific purpose, in order to pay each soul for whatever it earned, without the least injustice.
Shabbir Ahmed	45:22 For, God has created the heavens and earth with purpose, and that every 'self' shall be compensated for what it has earned. And none shall be wronged.

Will you not, then, bethink yourselves?
	Common Form of Idolatry: The Ego As A god

Rashad Khalifa	45:23 Have you noted the one whose god is his ego? Consequently, GOD sends him astray, despite his knowledge, seals his hearing and his mind, and places a veil on his eyes. Who then can guide him, after such a decision by GOD? Would you not take heed?
Shabbir Ahmed	45:23 Have you ever noted him who makes his desires his god? Consequently, God lets him go astray despite his knowledge, seals up his hearing and his heart, and places a veil on his sight. Then who will lead him after he has left God? Will you not then remember (this admonition)? ⁷

H10M40. The combination of these two letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. For the meaning of these letters, see 1:1; 2:1; 40:1; 13:38; 46:10; 74:1-56.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (45:6)

Those who consider God and His signs to be insufficient, answer this challenge in the affirmative. They list a number of hadith books as an answer. See 6:112-114; 12:111; 33:38. Many of those who follow hadith make fun of one of the greatest signs" prophesied in Chapter 74.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (45:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (45:3)

Cf. 2:164, where the term ayat has been rendered by me in the same way, inasmuch as those visible signs of a consciously creative Power convey a spiritual message to man.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (45:4)

Cf. 7:185 and the corresponding note. The intricate structure of human and animal bodies, and the life-preserving instincts with which all living creatures have been endowed, make it virtually impossible to assume that all this has developed "by accident"; and if we assume, as we must, that a creative purpose underlies this development, we must conclude, too, that it has been willed by a conscious Power which creates all natural phenomena "in accordance with an inner truth" (see note 11 on 10:5).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (45:5)

I.e., rain, with the symbolic connotation of physical and spiritual grace often attached to it in the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (45:6)

Lit., "in what tidings after God and His messages".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (45:7)

The term affak, which literally signifies a "liar" - and, particularly, a "habitual liar" - has here the connotation of "one who lies to himself" because he is ma'fuk, i.e., "perverted in his intellect and judgment" (Jawhari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (45:10)

I.e., anything to which they may attribute a quasi-divine influence on their lives, whether it be false deities or false values, e.g., wealth, power, social status, etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (45:11)

Lit., "and" or "but".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (45:11)

For an explanation of this rendering of the phrase min rijzin. see note 4 on 34:5.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (45:12)

For the reason of the above interpolation, see surah 14 note 46 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (45:13)

I.e., by endowing man, alone among all living beings, with a creative mind and, thus, with the ability to make conscious use of the nature that surrounds him and is within him.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (45:14)

Lit., "who do not hope for [i.e., expect] the Days of God", implying that they do not believe in them. As regards the meaning of "the Days of God", see surah 14 note 5.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (45:16)

Sc., "in the same way and for the same purpose as We now bestow this revelation of the Qur'an" - thus stressing the fact of continuity in all divine revelation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (45:16)

I.e., inasmuch as at that time they were the only truly monotheistic community (cf. 2:47).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (45:17)

This, I believe, is the meaning of the phrase min al-amr in the above context, although most of the classical commentators are of the opinion that amr signifies here "religion" (din), and interpret the whole phrase, accordingly, as "of what pertains to religion". Since, however, the common denominator in all the possible meanings of the term amr - e.g., "command", "in junction", "ordinance", "matter [of concern]", "event", "action", etc. - is the element of purpose, whether implied or explicit, we may safely assume that this is the meaning of the term in the above elliptic phrase, which obviously alludes to the purpose underlying all divine revelation and, consequently, man's faith in it. Now from the totality of the Quranic teachings it becomes apparent that the innermost purpose of all true faith is, firstly, a realization of the existence of God and of every human being's responsibility to Him; secondly, man's attaining to a consciousness of his own dignity as a positive element - a logically necessary element - in God's plan of creation and, thus, achieving freedom from all manner of superstitions and irrational fears; and, lastly, making man aware that whatever good or evil he does is but done for the benefit, or to the detriment, of his own self (as expressed in verse 15 above).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (45:17)

See 23:53 and the corresponding note 30.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (45:17)

Lit., "thereafter" or "in the end" (thumma) - i.e., after the failure of the earlier communities to realize the ideal purpose of faith in their actual mode of life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (45:18)

Lit., "on a way of the purpose [of faith]": see note on verse 17 above. It is to be borne in mind that the literal meaning of the term shari'ah is "the way to a watering-place", and since water is indispensable for all organic life, this term has in time come to denote a "system of laws", both moral and practical, which shows man the way towards spiritual fulfillment and social welfare: hence, "religious law" in the widest sense of the term. (See in this connection note 66 on the second part of 5:48.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (45:18)

I.e., who are not - or not primarily - motivated by God-consciousness and, hence, are swayed only by what they themselves regard as "right" in accordance with worldly, changing circumstances.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (45:19)

Lit., "against [i.e., "in defiance of"] God".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (45:20)

I.e., the Qur'an, which unfolds to man the purpose of all faith.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (45:21)

The meaning is twofold: "that We consider them to be equal with those who", etc., and "that We shall deal with them in the same manner as We deal with those who", etc. The reference to the intrinsic difference between these two categories with regard to "their life and their death" points not merely to the moral quality of their worldly existence, but also, on the one hand, to the inner peace and tranquility with which a true believer faces life's tribulations and the moment of death, and on the other, to the nagging anxiety which so often accompanies spiritual nihilism, and the "fear of the unknown" at the time of dying.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (45:22)

See note 11 on 10:5. The implication is that without a differentiation between right and wrong - or true and false - there would be no "inner truth" in the concept of a divinely-planned creation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (45:23)

Thus Razi, evidently reflecting the views of Zamakhshari, which have been quoted at length in my note 4 on 14:4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (45:23)

See note 7 on 2:7

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (45:24)

I.e., by accident, or as an outcome of blind forces of nature.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (45:25)

Lit., "their argument is nothing but that they say".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (45:25)

Cf. 44:36 and the corresponding note 19.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (45:27)

I.e., whatever they could not "prove" by direct observation or calculation. For the above rendering of al-mubtilun, see surah 29 note 47.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (45:33)

Lit., "and that which they were wont to deride will have enfolded them".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (45:35)

Lit., "since the life of this world has beguiled you": implying that this self-abandonment to worldly pursuits was the cause of their scornful disregard of God's messages.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (45:35)

Lit., "out of it". Regarding the stress on the phrase, "On that Day", see note 114 on the last paragraph of 6:128, note 10 on 40:12 and note 59 on 43:74.

Rashad Khalifa - The Final Testament

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 1 (45:6)

God condemns "Hadith" by name, and informs us that it is a blasphemous fabrication.

Shabbir Ahmed -

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 1 (45:7)

26:222. This draws our attention to forged Ahadith

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 2 (45:10)

29:24, 79:36, 82:16

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 3 (45:14)

Yaghfir, Ghafarah and derivatives = Forgive = Guarding against detriment = Protect from the harmful effects of misdeeds. Days of God = Life Hereafter = The Day of Resurrection, Judgment, Reckoning = When people establish the Divine Rule on earth. 14:5

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 4 (45:15)

'Amal-e-Saaleh = A good deed = Fulfilling others' needs = Increase human potential = Take corrective action = Help the individual or society = Doing collective good = Grow in goodness. 'Amal-e-Su = An evil deed = Disrupting someone's life = Hurting others = Causing imbalance = Promoting injustice and inequity

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 5 (45:16)

3:78, 6:90

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 6 (45:18)

42:13. Shari'ah = The way to a watering place = A flowing stream of pure water = Clear commandments. The flowing stream indicates that the commandments are not stagnant. While the basics remain unchanged, minor details will be flexible with changing times and needs

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 7 (45:23)

17:36, 32:9, 46:26

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 8 (45:26)

that the human 'self' survives physical death and that they be held accountable for all their deeds

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 9 (45:36)

For, He has designed the Universe such that no action goes without a just recompense

Edip-Layth	The Age of Intellectual and Emotional Maturity 46:15 We instructed the human being to honor his parents. His mother bore him with hardship, gave birth to him in hardship, and his weaning lasts thirty months. Until he has attained his maturity, and reaches forty years, he says: "My Lord, direct me to appreciate the blessings You have bestowed upon me and upon my parents, and to do righteousness that pleases You. Let my progeny be righteous. I have repented to You; I am of those who have peacefully surrendered."⁵
The Monotheist Group	46:15 And We enjoined the human being to honor his parents. His mother bore him with hardship, gave birth to him in hardship, and his bearing and weaning lasts thirty months. So that, when he has reached his independence, and he has reached forty years, he says: "My Lord, direct me to appreciate the blessings You have bestowed upon me and upon my parents, and to do righteousness that pleases You. And let my progeny be righteous. I have repented to You; I am of those who have submitted."
Muhammad Asad	46:15 NOW [among the best of the deeds which] We have enjoined upon man is goodness towards his parents. ¹⁶ In pain did his mother bear him, and in pain did she give him birth; and her bearing him and his utter dependence on her took thirty months. ¹⁷ and so, when he attains to full maturity and reaches forty years, ¹⁸ he [that is righteous] prays: O my Sustainer! Inspire me so that I may forever be grateful for those blessings of Thine with which Thou hast graced me and my parents, and that I may do what is right [in a manner] that will meet with Thy goodly acceptance; and grant me righteousness in my offspring [as well]. Verily, unto Thee have I turned in repentance: ¹⁹ for, verily, I am of those who have surrendered themselves unto Thee!"
Rashad Khalifa	40: The Age of Decision 46:15 We enjoined the human being to honor his parents. His mother bore him arduously, gave birth to him arduously, and took intimate care of him for thirty months. When he reaches maturity, and reaches the age of forty, he should say, "My Lord, direct me to appreciate the blessings You have bestowed upon me and upon my parents, and to do the righteous works that please You. Let my children be righteous as well. I have repented to You; I am a submitter." ³

Shabbir Ahmed	46:15 We have enjoined upon man goodness toward his parents. In pain his mother did bear him, and in pain she did give him birth. The carrying of the child and his total dependence on her took thirty months. And so, when he attains maturity and reaches forty years, he says, "My Lord! Enable me to be grateful for the blessings You have given me and to my parents, and that I may do works that meet Your Approval, and make my generations righteous as well. Surely, to You I turn for guidance, and truly I submit to You." ⁵

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (46:1)

H10M40. The combination of these two letters/numbers plays an important role in the mathematical system of the Quran based on code 19. For the meaning of these letters, see 1:1; 2:1; 40:1; 13:38; 46:10; 74:1-56.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (46:6)

Compare it to the New Testament, Matthew 7:21-23. Jesus (Esau), warns those who call him "Lord" with deserving the hellfire. Though this verse is distorted by some translations, by comparing different translations, one can infer the original message and distortions made afterwards. We have discussed this issue in "19 Questions For Christian Scholars." See 41:47-48.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (46:10)

In the 1980's, we learned that Rabi Juda, a French Jewish scholar who lived in eleventh century, had discovered a mathematical system based on the number 19, in the original parts of the Old Testament. The similarity and clarity of the discovery is impressive and fulfills the prophecy of this verse. Rabi Judah's discovery of 19 in the original parts of the Old Testament, and his correction of the modern text by using the code, together with a list of examples, was unveiled in an article authored by Joseph Dan and was published by the University of California in 1978 under the title "Studies in Jewish Mysticism." According to Dan's article, Rabi Juda claimed to have written 8 volumes on the code 19- based mathematical structure in the Hebrew Old Testament. Hopefully, one day some scholars will search and discover that important work.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (46:11)

A group of scholars, including my father and Tayyar Altıkulaç, the former head of Turkey's Department of Religious Affairs, published a book criticizing code 19. The title they picked for their book was no coincidence: 19 Efsanesi (The Myth of 19). Like their choice of key words, such as hadith, sunna, ijma, this too is another prophecy of the Quran. See 6:25.

Edip-Layth - End Note 5 (46:15)

This verse informs us that the sum of pregnancy and breastfeeding is 30 months. When evaluated together with verse 31:14 suggesting the time of breastfeeding as 24 months, it takes simple arithmetic to learn that the pregnancy of the person (nafs) to be 6 months. It is common knowledge that pregnancy is longer than that. We know from modern embryology that the exact time for a normal pregnancy is 266 days (see 77:23). There is extra information to be extracted from these natural and scriptural signs. If we subtract the 6 months, that is 180 days, from 266 days, we get 86 days. We can easily infer that the Quran does not accept the creature inside the womb to be a person (nafs) from the time of conception until the 86th day of pregnancy. Other verses support our inference. For instance, verse 22:5 and 23:14, which explain the evolution of the human being in four stages, does not use the word person (nafs) or human (insan) to describe the early stages of pregnancy. The four stages of pregnancy are (1) sperm; (2) embryo; (3) about four inch fetus (4) a new creature. It is clear that a new creation comes into existence after the 86th day. In other words, the emergence of consciousness/personhood (nafs) starts taking place in the brain of the fetus approximately three months after conception. Do we need to further add that reflecting on the ayat (signs) of the scripture together with the ayat (signs) of nature sheds light on the controversial issue of abortion? Also, see 16:58-59; 17:31

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (46:1)

See Appendix II.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (46:3)

Regarding the expression "in accordance with [an inner] truth", see note 11 on 10:5. The reference to the "term" set by God to all creation is meant to stress the fact of its finality in time as well as in space, in contrast with His Own timelessness and infinity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (46:3)

Lit., "from that whereof they have been warned": i.e., they refuse to heed the warning not to attribute divine qualities to any being or force beside God.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (46:4)

Sc., "in support of your claim that there are other divine powers besides God".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (46:5)

Lit., "will not respond to him till the Day of Resurrection", i.e., never.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (46:6)

For this symbolic "enmity" of all false objects of worship, see note 13 on 35:14.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (46:7)

Lit., "sorcery": see note 12 on 74:24, where the term sihr has been used, chronologically, for the first time in the above sense. As in that early instance, the truth referred to here is the message of the Qur'an.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (46:8)

Sc., "then why should I have invented all this for your sake?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (46:8)

The implication is, "May God forgive you, and grace you with His guidance" (Zamakhshari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (46:9)

Thus Tabari, Baghawi Razi, Ibn Kathir, implying - as Razi stresses - "I am but a human being like all of God's message-bearers who preceded me". Alternatively, the phrase may be rendered as "I am no innovator among the apostles" - i.e., "I am not preaching anything that was not already preached by all of God's apostles before me" (Razi and Baydawi): which coincides with the Quranic doctrine of the identity of the ethical teachings propounded by all of God's prophets.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (46:9)

I.e., "What will happen to all of us in this world" (Tabari, quoting with approval this interpretation of Al-Hasan al-Basri), or "both in this world and in the hereafter" (Baydawi). Either of these two interpretations implies a denial on the Prophet's part of any foreknowledge of the future and, in a wider sense, any knowledge of "that which is beyond the reach of human perception" (al-ghayb): cf. 6:50 or 7:188.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (46:10)

I.e., a prophet like himself. The "witness" spoken of here is evidently Moses: cf. the two Biblical passages relating to the advent of the Prophet Muhammad (Deuteronomy xviii, 15 and 18): "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me"; and "I will raise them up a prophet from among thy brethren, like unto thee, and will put My words in his mouth." (See in this connection note 33 on 2:42)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (46:11)

Lit., "towards it". Almost all of the classical commentators assume that this refers, specifically, to the contempt with which the pagan Quraysh looked down upon the early followers of Muhammad, most of whom came from the poorest, lowliest strata of Meccan society. However, the above "saying" has undoubtedly a timeless import inasmuch as the poor and lowly have always been among the first to follow a prophet. Moreover, it may also have a bearing on our times as well, inasmuch as the materially powerful nations, whom their technological progress has blinded to many spiritual verities, are increasingly contemptuous of the weakness of those civilizations in which religion still plays an important, albeit largely formalistic, role; and so, not realizing that this very formalism and the ensuing cultural sterility, and not religious faith as such, is the innermost cause of that weakness, they attribute it to the influence of religion per se, saying as it were, "If religion were any good, we would have been the first in holding on to it" - thus "justifying" their own materialistic attitude and their refusal to be guided by spiritual considerations.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (46:11)

I.e., the concept of divine revelation as such, as is evident from the subsequent reference to the revelation of Moses.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (46:12)

Sc., in its original, uncorrupted form.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (46:15)

Cf. 29:8 and 31:14. In the present instance, this connects with the reference to the "doers of good" at the end of verse 12 and in verses 13-14.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (46:15)

See note 14 on 31:14.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (46:15)

I.e., the age at which man is supposed to attain to full intellectual and spiritual maturity. It is to be borne in mind that the masculine noun insan ("man" or "human being") appearing in the first sentence of this verse applies to both sexes alike.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (46:15)

Sc., "of whatever sin I may have committed". See note 41 on the last sentence of 24:31.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (46:16)

I.e., "whom We shall reward in accordance with the best that they ever did": cf. 29:7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (46:17)

Sc., "without any indication that anyone has been or will be resurrected". This parabolic "dialogue" is not only meant to illustrate the ever-recurring - and perhaps natural - conflict between older and younger generations, but also points to the transmission of religious ideas as the most important function of parenthood, and thus, in a wider sense, as the basic element of all social continuity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (46:18)

See Appendix III.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (46:19)

The particle li prefixed to the subsequent verb is evidently what the grammarians call a lam al-aqibah: i.e., not an indication of intent ("so that") but simply of a causal sequence, which is best rendered as "and", "and so", or "hence".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (46:20)

I.e., for having arrogantly, without any objective justification, asserted that there is no life after death.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (46:21)

I.e., the Prophet Hud (see surah 7 note 48). The mention of Hud and the tribe of Ad connects with the last sentence of the preceding verse, inasmuch as this tribe "transgressed all bounds of equity all over their lands" (89:11).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (46:21)

Lit., "from between his hands and from behind him". This idiomatic phrase (explained in note 247 on 2:255) is evidently an allusion to the many warning messages, in Hud's own time as well as in the almost forgotten past, which ought to have made - but did not make - the tribe of Ad conscious of how far astray they had gone. We have here a subtle, parenthetical reminder that, apart from the revelations which He bestows upon His prophets, God offers His guidance to man through the many signs and warnings apparent in all nature as well as in the changing conditions of human society.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (46:24)

I.e., when they beheld, without recognizing it as such, the approach of their doom.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (46:25)

Lit., "then they became so that", etc. See 69:6-8, describing the sandstorm which destroyed the tribe of Ad without leaving any trace of them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (46:26)

This relates in the first instance to the pagan contemporaries of the Prophet, but applies to later generations as well. The tribe of Ad was the unchallenged lords in the vast region in which they lived (cf. 89:8 - "the like of whom has never been reared in all the land"). Moreover, the social conditions of their time were so simple and so free of the many uncertainties and dangers which beset people of higher civilizations that they could be regarded as more "securely established" on earth than people of later, more complex times.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (46:26)

I.e., intellect and feeling, both of which are comprised in the noun fu'ad.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (46:26)

Lit., "enfolded".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (46:27)

I.e., "close to you in space as well as in time". In its wider sense, this phrase denotes "all the rest of the world".

Muhammad Asad - End Note (46:28)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (46:29)

See surah 2 note 21. The connection between this passage and the preceding one apparently lies in the fact that whereas "those who are lost in sin" (of whom the tribe of ad is given as an example) refuse to heed God's messages, the "unseen beings" spoken of in the sequence immediately perceived their truth and accepted them.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (46:29)

The term nafar signifies a group of more than three and up to ten persons. The occurrence mentioned in this passage - said to have taken place in the small oasis of Nakhlah, on the way leading from Mecca to Ta'if (Tabari) - is evidently identical with that described in 72:1-15; for a tentative explanation, see note 1 on 72:1.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (46:29)

Lit., "as soon as they attended to it", i.e., to its recitation by the Prophet.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (46:29)

I.e., as preachers of the Quranic creed. The expression "as warners" connects with the preceding references to "warning messages".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (46:30)

For an explanation of this rendering of the phrase ma bayna yadayhi, see surah 3 note 3. As pointed out in note 1 on 72:1, this reference to the Qur'an as revealed "after Moses", omitting any mention of Jesus, seems to indicate that the speakers were followers of the Jewish faith; hence my interpolation of the words "of the Torah".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (46:32)

See note 11 on 72:15.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (46:33)

This is apparently an allusion to the Quranic doctrine that God's creative activity is continuous and unending.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (46:35)

I.e., the reality of life after death.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (46:35)

In this parabolic manner the Qur'an points to the illusory concept of "time" as experienced by the human mind - a concept which has no bearing on the ultimate reality to be unfolded in the hereafter.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (46:35)

Cf. the last sentence of 6:47 and the corresponding note 37.

At their zenith they were the richest nation in the world. Their economy was based on excellent agriculture and international trade. They had the most advanced irrigation systems of the times, with great water dams. Their kingdom included today's whole of Yemen, Somalia and Ethiopia, and boasting a strong army they frequently carried out expansionist invasions further south and up north. As the inevitable result of worshipping multiple false deities, including the sun, their society was not without inequities of caste and creed. Solomon, the King and the prophet, planned to subdue the Sheba Empire to thwart their aggressive behavior and to protect the region from oppression. And he succeeded magnificently. Queen Bilqees of Sheba and her people embraced Solomon's message and reverted to the worship and obedience of the One True God

This witness is Rabbi Judah the Pious (11th Century A.D.), who discovered the same 19-based mathematical code in intact fragments of the scripture (see Appendix 1).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 3 (46:15)

God knows full well who deserves to go to Heaven and who deserves to go to Hell. It is His law that whomever He put to death before the age of 40 shall go to Heaven. God's immense mercy is reflected in the fact that most people have difficulty accepting this divine mercy; they argue: ``Put them in Hell!" See Appendix 32.

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 4 (46:29)

Jinns are the creatures who fully agreed with Satan when he initiated his famous blasphemy billions of years ago. They are brought into this world as descendants of Satan. One jinn is borne every time a human being is born. The newly born jinn is assigned to the same body as the newly born human, and constantly pushes Satan's point of view (Appendix 7).

Rashad Khalifa - End Note 5 (46:35)

Quranic and mathematical evidence proves that the messenger addressed here is Rashad Khalifa. By adding the gematrical value of "Rashad Khalifa" (1230), plus the sura number (46), plus the verse number (35), we get 1311, or 19×69 . This conforms with the Quran's code (App2).

Edip-Layth	Allegorical Description of Paradise and Hell 47:15 The example of Paradise; that the righteous have been promised with rivers of pure water, rivers of milk whose taste does not change, rivers of intoxicants that are delicious for the drinkers, and rivers of strained honey. For them in it are all kinds of fruits, and forgiveness from their Lord. Compare it to that of those who abide in the fire, and are given to drink boiling water that cuts up their intestines.³
The Monotheist Group	47:15 Is the example of Paradise; that the righteous have been promised with rivers of pure water, and rivers of milk whose taste does not change, and rivers of wine that are delicious for the drinkers, and rivers of strained honey, and for them in it are all kinds of fruits, and a forgiveness from their Lord; like that of those who abide in the Fire, and are given to drink boiling water that cuts-up their intestines?
Muhammad Asad	47:15 [And can] the parable of the paradise which the God-conscious are promised¹³ [a paradise] wherein there are rivers of water which time does not corrupt, and rivers of milk the taste whereof never alters, and rivers of wine delightful to those who drink it, ¹⁴ and rivers of honey of all impurity cleansed, and the enjoyment ¹⁵ of all the fruits [of their good deeds] and of forgiveness from their Sustainer -: can this [parable of paradise] be likened unto [the parable of the recompense of] ¹⁶ such as are to abide in the fire and be given waters of burning despair¹⁷ to drink, so that it will tear their bowels asunder?
Rashad Khalifa	47:15 The allegory of Paradise that is promised for the righteous is this: it has rivers of unpolluted water, and rivers of fresh milk, and rivers of wine - delicious for the drinkers - and rivers of strained honey. They have all kinds of fruits therein, and forgiveness from their Lord. (Are they better) or those who abide forever in the hellfire, and drink hellish water that tears up their intestines?
Shabbir Ahmed	47:15 In allegorical terms the Paradise that the righteous are promised is this: Therein are rivers of ever fresh water, and rivers of ever fresh milk, and rivers of delicious wine, and rivers of clear-run honey. Therein are all kinds of fruit (of their good deeds), with a life secure from deterioration bestowed upon them from their Lord. Are they like the ones who abide in the fire and are given drinks of burning despair that tears their insides? ¹⁰

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (47:1)

I.e., whatever good deeds they may do will be so completely outweighed by the above mentioned sin that they will amount to nothing on the Day of Judgment. (See also note 9 below.) The above verse connects with the last sentence of the preceding surah, "Will, then, any be [really] destroyed save iniquitous folk?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (47:2)

Lit., "will set aright their hearts" or "their minds", inasmuch as one of the several meanings of the term bal is the "heart" or "mind" of man (Jawhari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (47:3)

Lit., "their parables" (amthalahum). This, according to some of the most outstanding commentators, relates to the parabolic expressions in the above three verses: the "going to waste" - in consequence of their deliberate "pursuance of falsehood" - of the good deeds of those who deny the truth, as well as the "effacement of the bad deeds" of the true believers in consequence of their "pursuance of the truth" (Baghawi, Zamakhshari, Razi, Baydawi). In a broader perspective, this interpretation takes into account the parabolic nature not only of the above sentence but also of many other Quranic statements relating to men's spiritual conditions and destinies in this world as well as in the life to come.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (47:4)

Sc., "and on barring [others] from the path of God" - thus connecting with verse 1 and laying down the fundamental condition which alone justifies physical warfare: namely, a defense of the Faith and of freedom (cf. in this connection see note 167 on 2:190). In other words, when "those who are bent on denying the truth" try to deprive the Muslims of their social and political liberty and thus to make it impossible for them to live in accordance with the principles of their faith, a just war (jihad) becomes allowable and, more than that, a duty. The whole of the above verse relates to war actually in progress (cf. note 168 on the first part of 2:191); and there is no doubt that it was revealed after 22:39-40, the earliest Quranic reference to physical warfare.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (47:4)

Lit., "tighten the bond". According to almost all the commentators, this expression denotes the taking of prisoners of war. In addition, it may also refer to any sanctions or safeguards which would make it unlikely that the aggression could be resumed in the foreseeable future.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (47:4)

Lit., "so that (hatta) the war may lay down its burdens". The term "ransom" comprises also, in this context, a mutual exchange of prisoners of war (Zamakhshari, quoting an opinion of Imam Ash-Shafi'i).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (47:4)

I.e., so as to enable the believers to prove by actual deeds the depth of their faith and their readiness for self-sacrifice, and to enable the aggressors to realize how wrong they have been, and thus to bring them closer to the truth.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (47:9)

Namely, the revelation relating to man's moral responsibility to a Supreme Being.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (47:9)

The particle fa ("and thus") at the beginning of this clause connotes a consequence: in other words, it is their rejection of the idea of moral responsibility, inherent in all divine revelation, that deprives the deeds of "those who are bent on denying the truth" - even such deeds as might be termed "good" - of all moral value. This law of inner causality explains fully the phrase "He will let all their [good] deeds go to waste" occurring in verses 1 and 8.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (47:10)

Cf. 6:10 and the corresponding note 9.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (47:13)

See note 116 on 6:131. It is said that this verse was revealed on the first night of the Prophet's hijrah from Mecca to Medina (Tabari, on the authority of Ibn Abbas).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (47:14)

Lit., "Is, then, one who takes his stand. . . like one," etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (47:15)

My rendering of this verse is based in its entirety on the grammatical construction given to it by Zamakhshari and supported by Razi. In this construction, the parabolic description of paradise - beginning with the phrase "wherein there are rivers, etc., and ending with the words "and forgiveness from their Sustainer" - is a parenthetic passage (jumlah mutaridah). As for the term "parable" (mathal) itself, it is undoubtedly meant to impress upon those who read or listen to the Qur'an that its descriptions of life in the hereafter are purely allegorical: see in this connection Zamakhshari's explicit remarks cited in note 65 on 13:35.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (47:15)

Cf. 37:45-47, especially verse 47: "no headiness will there be in it, and they will not get drunk thereon".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (47:15)

Lit., "and wherein they [i.e., the God-conscious] will have, etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (47:15)

This interpolation reproduces literally Zamakhshari's explanation of the above ellipticism.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (47:15)

Lit., "exceedingly hot [or "boiling"] water". For an explanation of this metaphor, see note 62 on 6:70.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (47:16)

Cf. 6:25 and 10:42-43.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (47:16)

Lit., "unto those who have been given knowledge", sc., "of the truth" or "of thy message": i.e., the believers. The people spoken of in the above are the hypocrites among the contemporaries of the Prophet as well as all people, at all times, who pretend to approach the Quranic message with a show of "reverence" but are in their innermost unwilling to admit that there is any sense in it.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (47:16)

I.e., the "sealing" of their hearts (for an explanation of which see note 7 on 2:7) is a consequence of their "following but their own lusts".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (47:17)

Lit., "and gives them their God-consciousness (taqwahum)".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (47:18)

Lit., "its indications have already come": a reference to the many Quranic predictions of its inevitability, as well as to the evidence, accessible to every unprejudiced mind, of the temporal finality of all creation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (47:18)

I.e., "of what benefit will be to them, when the Last Hour comes, their dawning awareness of having sinned, and their belated repentance?"

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (47:19)

I.e., "He knows all that you do and all that you fail to do".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (47:20)

I am rendering the term surah here and in the next sentence as "a revelation", for whereas there is no surah as such which deals exclusively with questions of war, there are numerous references to it in various surahs; and this is evidently the meaning of this term in the present context as well as in 9:86. There is no doubt that this verse precedes the revelation, in the year 1 H., of 22:39, which states categorically - and for the first time - that the believers are allowed to wage war whenever "war is wrongfully waged" against them (see in this connection note 57 on 22:39).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (47:20)

This is a reference to 22:39-40. For an explanation of the expression muhkamah ("clear in and by itself"), see note 5 on 3:7. (As in the preceding sentence, the term surah has been rendered here, exceptionally, as "revelation".)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (47:21)

I.e., an expression of readiness to fight in His cause: which is obviously the meaning of qawl ma'ruf in this context.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (47:22)

The above interpolations are in tune with the explanation of this passage advanced by almost all of the classical commentators, who regard this rhetorical "question" as an allusion to the chaotic conditions of pre-Islamic Arabia , its senseless internecine wars, and the moral darkness from which Islam had freed its followers. Nevertheless, this verse has, like the whole of the passage of which it forms a part, a timeless import as well.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (47:23)

Cf. the reference to God's "sealing" the hearts of stubborn wrongdoers in 2:7.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (47:26)

Lit., "this, because," etc.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (47:26)

Lit., "in some [or "parts of"] the matter": i.e., "although we cannot agree with you [atheists] as regards your denial of God, or of resurrection, or of the fact of revelation as such, we do agree with you that Muhammad is an impostor and that the Qur'an is but his invention" (Razi). By "those who turn their backs [on this message] after guidance has been vouchsafed to them" are meant, in the first instance, the hypocrites and half-hearted followers of Islam at the time of the Prophet who refused to fight in defense of the Faith, in a wider sense, however, this definition applies to all people, at all times, who are impressed by the teachings of the Qur'an but nevertheless refuse to accept it as God-inspired and, therefore, morally binding.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (47:27)

See note 55 on 8:50 .

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (47:28)

See first clause of verse 3 of this surah, which speaks of the "pursuit of falsehood". In the present instance, "that which would meet with His goodly acceptance" is the believer's readiness to sacrifice, if necessary, his life in the defense of the Faith.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (47:29)

The noun dighn (of which adghan is the plural) denotes, primarily, "rancour" or "hate"; in its wider sense it signifies a person's "disposition", "inclination" or "leaning", especially in its negative aspects (Jawhari): hence, a "moral defect" or "failing".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (47:30)

Lit., "by their marks": implying, elliptically, that God does not grant to anyone a clear insight, as by a visible mark, into another human being's heart or mind.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (47:30)

Lit., "the tone (lahn) of speech": indicating that a true believer recognizes hypocrisy even without a "visible mark" (sima).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (47:31)

Cf. 3:140, where the verb a1ama has been rendered in the same way.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (47:31)

Lit., "your announcements" - i.e., all assertions relating to belief. The "test" consists in one's readiness to undergo any sacrifice - and, since most of this surah deals with the problem of a just war (jihad) in God's cause - even the sacrifice of one's life.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (47:32)

For the above rendering of shaqqu, see note 16 on 8:13. The "cutting oneself off" from the Apostle signifies, of course, a rejection of his message, and, in this particular context, a refusal to follow the Quranic call to fight in a just cause, i.e., in defense of the Faith or of freedom (see note 167 on 2:190).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (47:35)

I.e., even if the fortunes of war go against them, the consciousness of having fought in the cause of truth and justice is bound to enhance the inner strength of the believers and, thus, to become a source of their future greatness: cf. 3:139.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (47:36)

Although the life of this world is "but a play and a passing delight", God does not want to deprive the believers of its rightful enjoyment: and so He expects them to sacrifice only a small part of their possessions in His cause. This passage evidently foreshadows the imposition of the obligatory annual tax called zakah ("the purifying dues"), amounting to about 2.5 percent of a Muslims's income and property, as pointed out by most of the classical commentators in connection with the above verse (hence my interpolation). The proceeds of this tax are to be utilized in what the Qur'an describes as "the cause [lit., "way"] of God", i.e., for the defense and propagation of the Faith and the welfare of the community; and its spiritual purpose is the "purification" of a Muslim's possessions from the blemish of greed and selfishness. (It is to be noted that the payment of zakah was made obligatory at the very beginning of the Medina period, that is, at approximately the same time as the revelation of the present surah.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (47:37)

Sc., "to divest yourselves of all your possessions".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (47:37)

For my rendering of adghan as "moral failings", see note 37 on verse 29 above. In the present context this term has more or less the same meaning as the term fujur in 91:8. The implication is that since man has been created weak" (4:28), the imposition of too great a burden on the believers would be self-defeating inasmuch as it might result not in an increase of faith but, rather, in its diminution. This passage illustrates the supreme realism of the Qur'an, which takes into account human nature as it is, with all its God-willed complexity and its inner contradictions, and does not, therefore, postulate a priori an impossible ideal as a norm of human behaviour. (Cf. 91:8, which speaks of man's personality as "imbued with moral failings as well as consciousness of God" - a phrase which is explained in the corresponding note 6.)

Shabbir Ahmed -

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 1 (47:1)

Even their good deeds will carry no weight against this mountain load of infringements. 47:8

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 2 (47:2)

The word Aamanoo (those who believe) has been repeated again, indicating that believers in the previous scriptures must believe in the Qur'an as well. Baal = State, condition. Salhil baal = Improvement of condition along with inner contentment

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 3 (47:3)

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 4 (47:4)

8:37, 38:40. Free the captives as an act of kindness or ransom, such as in exchange for your men in their captivity. There is no third option. Fadharb ar-riqaab is usually rendered as 'smite their necks.' A little contemplation, however, makes it plain that in a battle of swords and arrows no commander would order his soldiers to aim for the necks alone. Therefore, the stated term has been used idiomatically, indicating knocking out the command centers. It is interesting to note that even in today's encounters with high technology this principle is given a top priority

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 5 (47:5)

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (47:4)

The expression "darb al riqab" is traditionally translated as "smite their necks." We preferred to translate it as "strike the control center." The Quran uses the word "unuq" for neck (17:13,29; 8:12; 34:33; 38:33; 13:5; 26:4; 36:8; 40:71). The root RaQaBa means observe, guard, control, respect, wait for, tie by the neck, warn, fear. "Riqab" means slave, prisoner of war, since they are controlled or guarded. Even if one of the meanings of the word riqab were neck, we would still reject the traditional translation, for the obvious reason: The verse continues by instructing muslims regarding the capture of the enemies and the treatment of prisoners of war. If they were supposed to be beheaded, there would not be a need for an instruction regarding captives, which is a very humanitarian instruction. Unfortunately, the Sunni and Shiite terrorists have used the traditional mistranslation, and abused it further by beheading hostages in their fight against their counterpart terrorists, Crusaders and their allied coalition, who torture and kill innocent people in even bigger numbers, yet in a baptized fashion that is somehow depicted as non-barbaric by their culture and media. The Quran gives two options regarding the hostages or prisoners of war before the war ends: (1) set them free; or (2) release them to get a fee for their unjustified aggression. Considering the context of the verse and emphasis on capturing the enemy, we could have translated the segment under discussion as, "aim to take captives." The Old Testament contains many scenes of beheadings and grotesque massacres. For instance, see: 2 Samuel 4:7-12; 2 Kings 10:7, and 2 Chronicles 25:12.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (47:11)

See 2:286.

Edip-Layth - End Note 3 (47:15)

The only verse that uses intoxicants (KHAMR) in a positive context is 47:15, and interestingly it is about paradise, that is, the hereafter. A quick reflection on the reason for prohibition of intoxicants will explain the apparent contradiction. The harm of intoxicants, such as drunk driving, domestic violence or alcoholism, is not an issue in the other universe, where the laws and rules are different. In other words, a person who is rewarded by eternal paradise will not hurt himself, herself, or anyone else by getting intoxicated. See 52:23; 76:21. Also see 7:43; 15:47; 21:102; 41:31; 43:71; 2:112; 5:69.

Edip-Layth - End Note 4 (47:18)

Since the Quran is the last book, it gives us clues about the end of the world. See 20:13; 15:87.

49:6 O you who believe, if a wicked person brings any news to you, you shall first investigate, lest you commit injustice towards some people, out of ignorance, then become sorry and remorseful for what you have done.

Their evil will come back to them, and God was angry with them, and He has cursed them and prepared for them Hell. What a miserable destiny!
Muhammad Asad	48:6 And [God has willed] to impose suffering [in the life to come] on the hypocrites, both men and women, and on those who ascribe divinity to aught beside Him, both men and women: all who entertain evil thoughts about God. Evil encompasses them from all sides, and God's condemnation rests upon them; and He has rejected them [from His grace], and has readied hell for them: and how evil a journey's end! 6
Rashad Khalifa	48:6 And He will requite the hypocrite men and women and the idol worshipping men and women, for they have harbored evil thoughts about GOD. Their evil will backfire against them. For GOD is angry with them, condemns them, and has prepared for them Gehenna. What a miserable destiny!
Shabbir Ahmed	48:6 And He will punish the hypocrite men and the hypocrite women and the idolater men and idolater women who hold evil assumptions and plans against God. Around them is a circle of their disruptive deeds, and God's Disapproval is upon them and He deprives them of His grace. For them He has readied Hell, and how miserable is that as a destination!

The Monotheist Group	48:10 Those who pledge allegiance to you, are in-fact pledging allegiance to God; God's hand is above their hands. Those of them who violate such a pledge, are violating it only upon themselves. And whosoever fulfills what he has pledged to God, then He will grant him a great reward.
Muhammad Asad	48:10 Behold, all who pledge their allegiance to thee pledge their allegiance to God: the hand of God is over their hands. ⁸ Hence, he who breaks his oath, breaks it only to his own hurt; whereas he who remains true to what he has pledged unto God, on him will He bestow a reward supreme.
Rashad Khalifa	You Shall Support God's Messenger 48:10 Surely, those who pledge allegiance to you, are pledging allegiance to GOD. GOD approves their pledge; He places His hand above their hands. Those who violate such a pledge, commit the violation to their own detriment. As for those who fulfill their pledge with GOD, He will grant them a great recompense.
Shabbir Ahmed	48:10 Those who pledge allegiance to you (O Prophet!), in fact pledge allegiance to God. God's hand is over their hands. So, whoever shatters his pledge, shatters his own 'self'. And whoever keeps his pledge with God, to him He will grant a supreme reward. ⁷

Edip-Layth	48:17 There is no burden on the blind, nor is there any burden on the cripple, nor is there on the sick any burden. Whosoever obeys God and His messenger, He will admit them into paradises with rivers flowing beneath; and whosoever turns away, He will punish him with a painful retribution.
The Monotheist Group	48:17 There is no burden on the blind, nor is there any burden on the cripple, nor is there on the sick any burden. And whosoever obeys God and His messenger, He will admit them into paradises with rivers flowing beneath; and whosoever turns away, He will punish him with a painful retribution.
Muhammad Asad	48:17 No blame attaches to the blind, nor does blame attach to the lame, nor does blame attach to the sick [for staying away from a war in God's cause]; ¹⁹ but whoever heeds [the call of] God and His Apostle [in deed or in heart], ²⁰ him will He admit into gardens through which running waters flow; whereas him who turns away will He chastise with grievous chastisement.
Rashad Khalifa	48:17 The blind is not to be blamed, the crippled is not to be blamed, and the sick is not to be blamed. Those who obey GOD and His messenger, He will admit them into gardens with flowing streams. As for those who turn away, He will requite them with a painful retribution.
	48:17 There is no blame for the blind, nor is there blame for the disabled, nor is

Shabbir Ahmed	there blame for the sick (if they do not go forth in self-defense). Whoever obeys God and His messenger, He will admit him in the Gardens underneath which rivers flow. And whoever turns back, He will punish him with a painful doom. ⁹

The Monotheist Group	48:18 God is pleased with the believers who pledged allegiance to you under the tree. He thus knew what was in their hearts, so He sent down tranquility upon them, and rewarded them with a near victory.
Muhammad Asad	48:18 INDEED, well-pleased was God with the believers when they pledged their allegiance unto thee [O Muhammad] under that tree, ²¹ for He knew what was in their hearts; and so He bestowed inner peace upon them from on high, and rewarded them with [the glad tiding of] a victory soon to come ²²
Rashad Khalifa	48:18 GOD is pleased with the believers who pledged allegiance to you under the tree. He knew what was in their hearts and, consequently, He blessed them with contentment, and rewarded them with an immediate victory.
Shabbir Ahmed	48:18 God was pleased with the believers when they pledged allegiance to you (O Messenger!) under that shady tree. For, He knew what was in their hearts, and so He sent down upon them inner peace, and rewarded them by opening the gates to a swift victory. ¹⁰

Rashad Khalifa	48:20 GOD has promised you many spoils that you will gain. He thus advanced some benefits for you in this life, and He has withheld the people's hands of aggression against you, and has rendered this a sign for the believers. He thus guides you in a straight path.
Shabbir Ahmed	48:20 God promises you a great many gains that you shall acquire, and has given you these ones just to begin with. There had been acknowledging men and women whom you did not know, and you may have hurt them, and on whose account you would have committed a sin unknowingly. The Monotheist Group	48:25 They are the ones who rejected and barred you from the Sacred Temple, and barred your donations from reaching their destination. God will admit into His mercy whomever He wills. Had they become separated, We would then have punished those of them who rejected with a painful retribution.
Muhammad Asad	48:25 [It was not for your enemies sake that He stayed your hands from them: for]²⁹ it was they who were bent on denying the truth, and who debarred you from the Inviolable House of Worship ³⁰ and prevented your offering from reaching its destination.³¹ And had it not been for the believing men and believing women [in Mecca], whom you might have unwittingly trampled underfoot,³² and on whose account you might have become guilty, without knowing it, of a grievous wrong-: [had it not been for this, you would have been allowed to fight your way into the city: but you were forbidden to fight] ³³ so that [in time] God might admit to His grace whomever He wills. ³⁴ Had they [who deserve Our mercy and they whom We have condemned] been clearly discernible [to you],³⁵ We would indeed have imposed grievous suffering [at your hands] on such of them as were bent on denying the truth.
Rashad Khalifa	48:25 It is they who disbelieved and barred you from the Sacred Masjid, and even prevented your offerings from reaching their destination. There were believing men and women (within the enemy camp) whom you did not know, and you were about to hurt them, unknowingly. GOD thus admits into His mercy whomever He wills. If they persist, He will requite those among them who disbelieve with a painful retribution.
Shabbir Ahmed	48:25 These are the very people who denied the message, and barred you from the Sacred Masjid, and prevented your gifts from reaching their destination. Therein were believing men and believing women whom you did not know, and you could have harmed them. And on their account you could have carried guilt without knowing it. Thus God admits into His grace whoever seeks it. If the rejecters persist in aggression, We shall clearly separate them (from the believers) and punish them with an awesome doom.

The Monotheist Group	48:26 Those who rejected had put in their hearts the rage of the days of ignorance, then God sent down tranquility upon His messenger and the believers, and directed them to uphold the word of righteousness, and they were well entitled to it and worthy of it. And God is fully aware of all things.
Muhammad Asad	48:26 Whereas they who are bent on denying the truth harboured a stubborn disdain in their hearts - the stubborn disdain [born] of ignorance ³⁶ God bestowed from on high His [gift of] inner peace upon His Apostle and the believers, and bound them to the spirit of God-consciousness: ³⁷ for they were most worthy of this [divine gift], and deserved it well. And God has full knowledge of all things.
Rashad Khalifa	48:26 While those who disbelieved were enraged, and their hearts were filled with the pride of the days of ignorance, GOD blessed His messenger and the believers with peaceful contentment, and directed them to uphold the word of righteousness. This is what they well deserved. GOD is fully aware of all things.
Shabbir Ahmed	48:26 Just when the unbelievers had their hearts filled with zeal, the zeal of the Age of Ignorance, right then God sent down His blessing of inner contentment upon His messenger and upon the believers, and empowered them to ward off this kind of zealotry. For, they truly deserved this virtue and it was befitting for them to own it. God is Knower of all things. ¹³

The Monotheist Group	48:27 God has fulfilled with truth His messenger's vision: "You will enter the Sacred Temple, God willing, secure, with your heads shaven, and having shortened - no longer in fear." Thus, He knew what you did not know, and He has coupled this with a conquest near at hand.
Muhammad Asad	48:27 Indeed, God has shown the truth in His Apostle's true vision: ³⁸ most certainly shall you enter the Inviolable House of Worship, if God so wills, in full security, with your heads shaved or your hair cut short, without any fear: ³⁹ for He has [always] known that which you yourselves could not know. ⁴⁰ And He has ordained [for you], besides this, a victory soon to come. ⁴¹
Rashad Khalifa	48:27 GOD has fulfilled His messenger's truthful vision: "You will enter the Sacred Masjid, GOD willing, perfectly secure, and you will cut your hair or shorten it (as you fulfill the pilgrimage rituals) there. You will not have any fear. Since He knew what you did not know, He has coupled this with an immediate victory."
Shabbir Ahmed	48:27 God has vindicated His messenger's vision of solidarity. You shall enter the Masjid-al-Haraam (the Sacred Masjid), God willing, perfectly secure, having unburdened your heads of all fear. And He knows what you do not know, and He has granted you a swift victory. ¹⁴

Edip-Layth	48:29 Muhammad, the messenger of God, and those who are with him, are severe against the ingrates, but merciful between themselves. You see them kneeling and prostrating, they seek God's blessings and approval. Their distinction is in their faces, as a result of prostrating. Such is their example in the Torah. Their example in the Injeel is like a plant which shoots out and becomes strong and thick and it stands straight on its trunk, pleasing to the farmers. That He may enrage the ingrates with them. God promises those among them who acknowledge and do good works forgiveness and a great reward.
The Monotheist Group	48:29 Mohammed is the messenger of God, and those who are with him are severe against the rejecters, but merciful between themselves. You see them kneeling and prostrating, they seek God's blessings and approval. Their distinction is in their faces, as a result of prostrating. Such is their example in the Torah. And their example in the Injeel is like a plant which shoots out and becomes strong and thick and it stands straight on its trunk, pleasing to the farmers. That He may enrage the rejecters with them. God promises those among them who believe and do good works a forgiveness and a great reward.
Muhammad Asad	48:29 MUHAMMAD is God's Apostle; and those who are [truly] with him are firm and unyielding ⁴³ towards all deniers of the truth, [yet] full of mercy towards one another. ⁴⁴ Thou canst see them bowing down, prostrating themselves [in prayer], seeking favour with God and [His] goodly acceptance: their marks are on their faces, traced by prostration. ⁴⁵ This is their parable in the Torah as well as their parable in the Gospel: ⁴⁶ [they are] like a seed that brings forth its shoot, and then He strengthens it, so that it grows stout, and [in the end] stands firm upon its stem, delighting the sowers. [Thus will God cause the believers to grow in strength,] so that through them He might confound the deniers of the truth. ⁴⁷ [But] unto such of them as may [yet] attain to faith and do righteous deeds, God has promised forgiveness and a reward supreme. ⁴⁸

Rashad Khalifa	Qualities of the Believers 48:29 Muhammad - the messenger of GOD - and those with him are harsh and stern against the disbelievers, but kind and compassionate amongst themselves. You see them bowing and prostrating, as they seek GOD's blessings and approval. Their marks are on their faces, because of prostrating. This is the same example as in the Torah. Their example in the Gospel is like plants that grow taller and stronger, and please the farmers. He thus enrages the disbelievers. GOD promises those among them who believe, and lead a righteous life, forgiveness and a great recompense.
Shabbir Ahmed	48:29 Muhammad is God's messenger. And those who are with him are stern towards the rejecters of truth, and full of compassion towards one another. You can see them bowing (to commands), adoring (Him), as they seek God's bounty and Acceptance. Their signs (of belief) are on their faces, the effects of adoration. Such is their likeness in the Torah and their likeness in the Gospel. They are like a seed that brings forth its shoot, and then He strengthens it, so that it grows stout, and then stands firm on its stem, delighting those who have sown it. (Thus the believers grow in strength,) so that through them He might confound with rage the rejecters. But to those who may yet attain belief and benefit others, God promises protection of their own 'self' and an immense reward. ¹⁶

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (48:1)

Namely, the moral victory achieved by the Truce of Hudaibiyyah, which opened the doors to the subsequent triumph of Islam in Arabia (see introductory note, which explains many allusions to this historic event found in the subsequent verses).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (48:2)

Lit., "so that God might forgive thee all that is past of thy sins and all that is yet to come" - thus indicating elliptically that freedom from faults is an exclusive prerogative of God, and that every human being, however exalted, is bound to err on occasion.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (48:2)

Sc., "to a fulfillment of thy mission", which the Truce of Hdaybiyyah clearly presaged.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (48:4)

I.e., endowed them, although they were few and practically unarmed, with calm courage in the face of the much more powerful forces of the enemy.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (48:4)

Lit., "so that they might add faith to their faith, seeing that God's are", etc. Since the latter is obviously a parenthetic clause, I have transposed it in my rendering in order to make the meaning clear.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (48:6)

I.e., who deny His existence or man's responsibility to Him, or offend against the concept of His oneness.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (48:9)

Lit., "at morn and evening", i.e., at all times.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (48:10)

This refers, in the first instance, to the pledge of faith and allegiance (bayat ar-ridwan) which the Muslims assembled at Hdaybiyyah gave to the Prophet (see introductory note). Beyond this historical allusion, however, the above sentence implies that as one's faith in God's message- bearer is to all intents and purposes synonymous with a declaration of faith in God Himself, so does one's willingness to obey God necessarily imply a willingness to obey His message-bearer. The phrase "the hand of God is over their hands" does not merely allude to the hand-clasp with which all of the Prophet's followers affirmed their allegiance to him, but is also a metaphor for His being a witness to their pledge.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (48:11)

Lit., "who were left behind": i.e., the bedouin belonging to the tribes of Ghifar, Muzaynah, Juhaynah, Ashja, Aslam and Dhayl, who, although allied with the Prophet and outwardly professing Islam, refused under various pretexts to accompany him on his march to Mecca (which resulted in the Truce of Hdaybiyyah), since they were convinced that the Meccans would give battle and destroy the unarmed Muslims (Zamakhshari). The excuses mentioned in the sequence were made after the Prophet's and his followers' successful return to Medina ; hence the future tense, sayaqul.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (48:11)

Implying that the excuses which they would proffer would be purely hypocritical.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (48:11)

Lit., "has anything in his power (that could be obtained) in your behalf from God": a construction which, in order to become meaningful in translation, necessitates a paraphrase.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (48:12)

Implying that the real sympathies of those bedouin were with the pagan Quraysh rather than with the Muslims.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (48:14)

Implying that He may forgive even the most hardened sinners if they truly repent and mend their ways: an allusion to what the Prophet was to say according to verse 16.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (48:15)

Lit., "set forth to take booty": i.e., any expedition other than against the Quraysh of Mecca, with whom the Prophet had just concluded a truce. This is generally taken as an allusion to the forthcoming war against the Jews of Khaybar (in the year 7 H.), but the meaning may well be more general.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (48:15)

Evidently a reference to 8:1 - "All spoils of war belong to God and the Apostle" - which, as pointed out in the note on that verse, implies that no individual warrior can have any claim to the booty obtained in war. Moreover, fighting for the sake of booty contravenes the very principle of a "war in God's cause", which may be waged only in defense of faith or liberty (cf. surah 2 note 167), "until there is no more oppression and all worship is devoted to God alone" (see 2:193 and the corresponding note 170). It is to these principles, too, that the Prophet's anticipated answer, mentioned in the sequence, refers.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (48:15)

I.e., in the first verse of Al-Anfal, which was revealed in the year 2 H. (see preceding note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (48:16)

This is evidently a prophecy relating to the future wars against Byzantium and Persia.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (48:16)

Lit., "before", i.e., at the time of the expedition which resulted in the Truce of Hudaibiyyah.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (48:17)

These three categories circumscribe metonymically all kinds of infirmities or disabilities which may prevent a person from actively participating in a war in God's cause.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (48:17)

This latter applies, by obvious implication, to such as are unable to participate in the fighting physically, but are in their hearts with those who fight.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (48:18)

I.e., at Hudaibiyyah (see introductory note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (48:18)

Most of the commentators assume that this relates to the conquest of Khaybar, which took place a few months after the Truce of Hudaibiyyah. It is probable, however, that the implication is much wider than that - namely, a prophecy of the almost bloodless conquest of Mecca in the year 8 H., the victorious establishment of Islam in all of Arabia and, finally, the tremendous expansion of the Islamic Commonwealth under the Prophet's immediate successors.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 23 (48:20)

Sc., "of what is to come to you in the hereafter".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 24 (48:20)

thus Razi

Muhammad Asad - End Note 25 (48:21)

I.e., the achievement of final bliss in the life to come.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 26 (48:22)

This divine promise was fulfilled in the unbroken sequence of Muslim victories after the Truce of Hudaibiyyah, ultimately leading to the establishment of an empire which extended from the Atlantic Ocean to the confines of China. For the conditional nature of the above promise, see note 82 on 3:111.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 27 (48:23)

This reference to "God's way" (sunnat Allah) is twofold: on the one hand, "you are bound to rise high if you are (truly) believers" (3:139), and, on the other, "God does not change men's condition unless they change their inner selves" (13:11), in both the positive and negative connotations of the concept of "change".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 28 (48:24)

Shortly before the Truce of Hudaibiyyah was concluded, a detachment of Quraysh warriors - variously estimated at between thirty and eighty men - attacked the Prophet's camp, but his practically unarmed followers overcame them and took them prisoner; after the signing of the treaty the Prophet released them unharmed (Muslim, Nasa'i, Tabari).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 29 (48:25)

This interpolation is based on Razi's explanation of the connection between this and the preceding verse.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 30 (48:25)

I.e., the Kabah, which, until the year 7 H., the Muslims were not allowed to approach.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 31 (48:25)

See the second surah 2 note 175.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 32 (48:25)

I.e., killed. After the Prophet's and his followers' exodus to Medina , a number of Meccans - both men and women - had embraced Islam, but had been prevented by the pagan Quraysh from emigrating (Tabari, Zamakhshari). Their identities were not generally known to the Muslims of Medina.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 33 (48:25)

Thus Zamakhshari , supported by Razi, Ibn Kathir, and other commentators.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 34 (48:25)

I.e., so that the believers might be spared, and that in time many a pagan Meccan might embrace Islam, as actually happened.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 35 (48:25)

Lit., "had they been separated from one another": i.e., the believers and the pagans among the Meccans. In its wider sense, the above implies that man never really knows whether another human being deserves God's grace or condemnation.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 36 (48:26)

Although this reference to the "stubborn disdain" (hamiyyah) on the part of the pagan Quraysh may have been characteristic of their over-all attitude towards the Prophet and his mission, it is probable - as Zamakhshari points out - that its special mention here relates to an incident which occurred at Hudaibiyyah during the truce negotiations between the Prophet and the emissary of the Meccans, Suhayl ibn Amr. The Prophet began to dictate to Ali ibn Abi Talib the text of the proposed agreement: "Write down, 'In the name of God, the Most Gracious, the Dispenser of Grace' " ; but Suhayl interrupted him and said: "We have never heard of [the expression] 'the Most Gracious'; write down only what we know." Whereupon the Prophet said to Ali: "Write, then, 'In Thy name, O God'." Ali wrote as he was told; and the Prophet continued: "This is what has been agreed upon between Muhammad, God's Apostle, and the people of Mecca ". But Suhayl interrupted again: "If thou wert (really) an apostle of God, (this would be an admission on our part that) we have been doing wrong to thee; write, therefore, as we understand it." And so the Prophet dictated to Ali: "Write thus: 'This is what has been agreed upon between Muhammad, the son of Abd Allah, son of Abd al-Muttalib, and the people of Mecca '." (This story is recorded in many versions, among others by Nasa'i, Ibn Hanbal and Tabari.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 37 (48:26)

Lit., "the word of God-consciousness" (kalimat at-taqwa): implying that their consciousness of God and of His all-pervading power enabled them to bear the "stubborn disdain" of their enemies with inner calm and serenity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 38 (48:27)

Shortly before the expedition which ended at Hudaibiyyah, the Prophet had a dream in which he saw himself and his followers entering Mecca as pilgrims. This dream-vision was destined to be fulfilled a year later, in 7 H., when the Muslims were able to perform their first peaceful pilgrimage to the Holy City

Muhammad Asad - End Note 39 (48:27)

Male pilgrims usually shave or (which is the meaning of the conjunctive wa in this context) cut their hair short before assuming the pilgrim's garb (ihram), for it is not permitted to do so while in the state of pilgrimage. A repetition of the same act marks the completion of the pilgrimage (cf. 2:196).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 40 (48:27)

Namely, the future.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 41 (48:27)

See note 22.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 42 (48:28)

Sc., "through the revelations which He grants to His prophets". See also 3:19 - "the only [true] religion in the sight of God is [man's] self-surrender unto Him": from which it follows that any religion (in the widest sense of this term) which is not based on the above principle is, eo ipso, false.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 43 (48:29)

This composite gives, I believe, the full meaning of the term ashidda (sing. shadid) in the above context.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 44 (48:29)

Lit., "among themselves". Cf. 5:54 - "humble towards the believers, proud towards all who deny the truth".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 45 (48:29)

The infinitive noun sujud ("prostration") stands here for the innermost consummation of faith, while its "trace" signifies the spiritual reflection of that faith in the believer's manner of life and even in his outward aspect. Since the "face" is the most expressive part of man's personality, it is often used in the Qur'an in the sense of one's "whole being".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 46 (48:29)

Regarding the significance of the term Injil ("Gospel") as used in the Qur'an, see the surah 3 note 4.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 47 (48:29)

Lit., "infuse with wrath".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 48 (48:29)

Whereas most of the classical commentators understand the above sentence as alluding to believers in general, Razi relates the pronoun minhum ("of them" or "among them") explicitly to the deniers of the truth spoken of in the preceding sentence - i.e., to those of them who might yet attain to faith and thus achieve God's forgiveness: a promise which was fulfilled within a few years after the revelation of this verse, inasmuch as most of the Arabian enemies of the Prophet embraced Islam, and many of them became its torchbearers. But in a wider sense, this divine promise remains open until Resurrection Day (Tabari), relating to everybody, at all times and in all cultural environments, who might yet attain to the truth and live up to it.

This important prophecy informs us that Submission will inevitably dominate the whole world. This, together with Verses 9:33,41:53, and 61:9 leave no doubt that God's mathematical miracle of the Quran will play a major role in this prophecy. Solid Quranic mathematical evidence points to God's Messenger of the Covenant as fulfilling this prophecy. See Appendices 2 and 26 for the evidence and specific details.

Edip-Layth - Quran: A Reformist Translation

Edip-Layth - End Note 1 (49:1)

Followers of hadith and sunna claim that God is represented by the Quran, and the messenger is represented by his opinions on the Quran. Thus, they claim that the Quran is not enough for salvation. Some people may not utter this claim straightforwardly. They may even claim that the Quran is complete and enough for our guidance. However, further questioning will reveal that their quran is not "the Quran." The Quran is the one that consists of 114 Chapters and 6346 verses. It is a mathematically coded book. However, their minds are confused, and their quran is contaminated with human speculations and limited by a snapshot interpretation. They try to scare the believers by saying "you do not like the messenger." The belief that God is represented by the Quran, and the messenger by his teaching is a satanic claim. There are several points to remember:

- Quran represents God and His messenger.
- Obeying the Quran is obeying God and the messenger.
- Quran never says: "Obey God and Moses," or "Obey God and Muhammad." Rather, Quran consistently states: "Obey God and the messenger." This is because the word messenger (rasul) comes from the "message" (risala). The message is entirely from God; messengers cannot exist without the message.
- Messengers, as humans, make mistakes. Thus, when believers made a covenant with prophet Muhammad they promised to obey him conditionally, i.e., his righteous orders (60:12). Moreover, God specifically orders Muhammad to consult the believers around him (3:159). If nobody can object to the personal decision of the messenger, then consultation is meaningless. However, whenever the final decision is made, it should be followed.
- During their lifetimes, messengers are community leaders. In this regard, messengers are not different than the believers who are in charge (4:59); both should be obeyed. But, this obedience is not absolute. It is open to consultation and discussion.
- The position of messengers is different during their lives; they are interactive teachers and curious students as well. We have the chance to ask them further questions, discuss issues, learn their intentions, and even correct their mistakes. On the other hand, they have the opportunity to correct our misunderstandings. However, when they pass away, their teaching becomes frozen and loses its advancing three-dimensional character. The frozen, snap-shot fragments of knowledge are a dangerous weapon in the hands of ignorant people, to stop God's teachings. They defend every plain error in the name of the messenger. They insult every sincere student of God's revelation.

We reject Hadith because we respect Muhammad. No sound person would like to have people born several centuries after him roam the earth and collect hearsay attributed to him. Besides, if Muhammad and his supporters really believed that the Quran was not sufficient for guidance, or an ambiguous book, or lacked details, then, surely they would have been the first ones to write the hadith down and collect them in books. After all, their numbers were in the hundreds of thousands and they had plenty of wealth. They could afford some ink, papyrus paper or leather, and some brain cells, for such an important task. They would not leave it to a guy from faraway Bukhara or his ilk, more than two hundred years later, to collect hadiths in a land soaked with blood because of sectarian wars. Additionally, Muhammad had many unemployed or handicapped people around who would gladly volunteer for such a mission. To explain away this 200-year gap in history, the traditionalists created an absurd fabricated excuse for prophet Muhammad and his supporters. Supposedly, Muhammad and his followers feared that people would mix the Quran with hadiths. This is nonsense. They were smart enough to distinguish both, and there were enough people to keep track of them. Besides, it is the followers of hadith and sunna themselves who claim that the Quran was a "literary miracle." If their claim of "literary miracle" were true, then it would be much easier to separate the verses of the Quran from hadith. Let's assume that they could not really distinguish the text of the Quran from Muhammad's words, then couldn't they simply mark the pages of the scripture with the letter Q for the Quran and letter H for Hadith, or let some record only the Quran, or simply color code their covers? Or allocate leather for the Quran and paper for hadith, or vice versa? They could find many ways to keep different books separate from each other. They did not need to study rocket science or have computer technology to accomplish that primitive task. The collectors of hadiths wished that people would accept their assertion that Muhammad and his supporters did not have ink, paper or leather, minds, and a willingness to collect hadith before them. It is no wonder they even fabricated a few hadiths claiming that Muhammad's companions were competing with dogs for bones to write the verses of the Quran on! Most likely, Muhammad feared that people would mix his words with the Quran. Not in the primitive way that is claimed by the Sunnis and Shiites, since as we pointed out, there were many ways to eliminate that concern. But the real concern of Muhammad was different. Because of the warnings of the Quran, he feared that muslims would follow the footsteps of Jews and would create their own Mishna, Gomorra, and Talmud: hadith would be considered to be an authority, as another source besides the Quran, setting him up as a partner with God! Ironically, the followers of hadith and sunna accomplished exactly that. They did not need to publish the text of hadith together with the Quran--though they have done that in many commentaries--because have been doing worse. Though they usually have kept hadith separate from the Quran physically, when it comes to purposes of guidance and religious authority, they mix it with the Quran. Even worse, they make the understanding of the Quran dependent on the understanding of hadith, thereby elevating hadith to a position of authority over the Quran. Thus, if indeed Muhammad was worried about people mixing his words with the Quran, the followers of hadith proved his worries right: centuries after him, not only did they mix his words with the Quran, but also mixed thousands of fabrications and nonsense attributed to him. See 25:30; 59:7.

Edip-Layth - End Note 2 (49:13)

This verse unequivocally rejects sexism and racism and reminds us that neither male nor female, neither this race nor that race, is superior to the other. Recognition and appreciation of diversity is an important point in our test. The only measure of superiority is righteousness; being a humble, moral and socially conscientious person who strives to help others. See 4:34; 7:19; 24:61; 30:21-22; 33:5; 48:17; 60:12.

Muhammad Asad - The Message Of Quran

Muhammad Asad - End Note 1 (49:1)

I.e., "do not allow your own desires to have precedence".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 2 (49:2)

This has both a literal and a figurative meaning: literal in the case of the Prophet's Companions, and figurative for them as well as for believers of later times - implying that one's personal opinions and predilections must not be allowed to overrule the clear-cut legal ordinances and/or moral stipulations promulgated by the Prophet (cf. 4:65 and the corresponding note 84).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 3 (49:2)

I.e., address him, or (in later times) speak of him, with unbecoming familiarity.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 4 (49:4)

While this relates in the first instance to the Prophet, it may also be taken to apply to any supreme leader of the community (amir al-muminin) who acts as the Prophet's successor (khalifah) and rules in his name, i.e., under the aegis of Islamic Law. (As regards the Prophet himself, the above exhortation to reverent behaviour implies, in the view of many outstanding Islamic thinkers, a prohibition to "call out to him" when visiting his tomb.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 5 (49:6)

I.e., verify the truth before giving credence to any such report or rumour. The tale-bearer is characterized as "iniquitous" because the very act of spreading unsubstantiated rumours affecting the reputation of other persons constitutes a spiritual offence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 6 (49:6)

Thus, after laying stress in the preceding verses on the reverence due to God's message- bearer - and, by implication, to every righteous leader of the community - the discourse turns to the moral imperative of safeguarding the honour and reputation of every member of the community, man and woman alike. This principle is taken up, more explicitly, in verse 12.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 7 (49:7)

Sc., "and he ought to be an example for you as regards your behaviour towards one another": i.e., he would not accept rashly a hearsay tale affecting the honour of third persons, but would either refuse to listen to it altogether or, should a clarification become necessary in the interests of the community, would insist on ascertaining the truth objectively.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 8 (49:7)

Lit., "in many a case (amr)": the implication being that, more often than not, man is prone to give credence to malicious rumours devoid of any real evidence.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 9 (49:9)

The expression "fighting" comprises in this context all modes of discord and contention, both in word and deed, evidently as a consequence of the slanderous rumours spoken of in verse 6 above.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 10 (49:9)

I.e., that the believers should act as brethren (see next verse).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 11 (49:10)

The plural noun ikhwah ("brethren" or "brotherhood") has here, of course, a purely ideological connotation, comprising men and women alike; the same applies to the subsequent mention of "your two brethren".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 12 (49:11)

The implication is that believers, whether men or women, shall never deride one another (Zamakhshari , Baydawi).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 13 (49:11)

This applies no less to the faith of the one who insults than to that of the insulted (Razi): cf. 6:82 - "[those] who have not obscured their faith by wrongdoing".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 14 (49:12)

I.e., guesswork that may lead to unfounded suspicion of another person's motives: see note 22 on 24:19.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 15 (49:13)

I.e., "We have created every one of you out of a father and a mother" (Zamakhshari , Razi, Baydawi) - implying that this equality of biological origin is reflected in the equality of the human dignity common to all.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 16 (49:13)

I.e., know that all belong to one human family, without any inherent superiority of one over another (Zamakhshari). This connects with the exhortation, in the preceding two verses, to respect and safeguard each other's dignity. In other words, men's evolution into "nations and tribes" is meant to foster rather than to diminish their mutual desire to understand and appreciate the essential human oneness underlying their outward differentiations; and, correspondingly, all racial, national or tribal prejudice (asabiyyah) is condemned - implicitly in the Qur'an, and most explicitly by the Prophet (see second half of note 15 on 28:15). In addition, speaking of people's boasting of their national or tribal past, the Prophet said: "Behold, God has removed from you the arrogance of pagan ignorance (jahiliyyah) with its boast of ancestral glories. Man is but a God-conscious believer or an unfortunate sinner. All people are children of Adam, and Adam was created out of dust." (Fragment of a hadith quoted by Tirmidhi and Abu Da'ud, on the authority of Abu Hurayrah.)

Muhammad Asad - End Note 17 (49:14)

Inasmuch as this is evidently an allusion to the intense tribalism of the bedouin and their "pride of descent" (Razi), the above verse connects with the preceding condemnation of all tribal preferences and prejudices, and with the call for their abandonment as a prerequisite of true faith. Primarily, this relates to the bedouin contemporaries of the Prophet, but its import is general and timeless.

Muhammad Asad - End Note 18 (49:14)

I.e., "your own deeds, in distinction from the supposed 'glorious deeds' of your ancestors, which count for nothing in His sight".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 19 (49:15)

Lit., "and thereafter have had no doubt".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 20 (49:16)

Like the preceding passage, this, too, is addressed in the first instance to certain contemporaries of the Prophet, but its meaning extends to all people, at all times, who think that their mere profession of faith and outward adherence to its formalities makes them "believers".

Muhammad Asad - End Note 21 (49:17)

Lit., "They" (see preceding note).

Muhammad Asad - End Note 22 (49:17)

I.e., "by professing to be thy followers".

Shabbir Ahmed -

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 1 (49:1)

Refrain from holding your opinions above what God has revealed to His messenger

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 2 (49:2)

In my opinion, this verse applies today as well. We must be respectful whenever we speak of him. 33:56

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 3 (49:10)

They are members of one family, brothers and sisters to one another

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 4 (49:11)

Taubah = Returning to the right path = Repentance

Shabbir Ahmed - End Note 5 (49:13)

Min zakarinwwa untha = Of a kind that is male, and of a kind that is female = Male and female = Some of you are men and some of you are women. On this note I find myself in agreement with M. Pickthall 39:6
